In Syud Emam Muntazooddeen Mahomed v. Raj Coomar Dass (I. L.R., 7 Cal., 714 : s. c., 9 C. L. R., 353), a mortgagee, who had obtained a summary decree under the Registration Act XX of 1866, afterwards brought a suit to enforce his lien upon the mortgaged property in the hands of the mortgagor. The Court, having pointed out [653] that the effect of the summary decree was the same as that of a money-decree in an ordinary mortgage-suit, held that the plaintiff had not, by obtaining a personal decree, forfeited his lien upon the land, but that he must enforce it in execution, and could not maintain a suit for the purchase.

In Jonmenjoy Mullick v. Dossmoney Dossee (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 714 : s. c., 9 C. L. R., 353), the plaintiff had obtained a money-decree against his mortgagor. After the decree the mortgagor sold the mortgaged property, and it was held that the plaintiff might enforce his lien by suit against the property in the hands of the purchasers.

These two cases establish that there is a difference in the procedure applicable between the case where the property is still in the hands of the mortgagor and the case where it has passed to a purchaser, the lien being enforceable in the one case by execution, in the other by suit.

But we do not see how the right can be more extensive in the one case than in the other.

It would be contrary to ordinary principles, we think, to hold that the mortgagee acquires a greater right by reason of the mortgagor's alienation, and that the purchaser takes subject to a greater burden than the debtor himself.

In the present case, the plaintiff has allowed his decree against the debtor to be long since barred by limitation, and has therefore lost all right to proceed by execution against the property in the hands of his debtor. We think he has no better right to proceed by suit against the property in the hands of the purchaser.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

[On appeal from the High Court at Fort William in Bengal.]

Sale in execution of decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 311—Irregularity in publication of intended sale.

An objection to the validity of a sale of revenue-paying land, on the ground that the revenue assessed upon it had not been stated in the proclamation of the intended sale, in accordance with s. 287 of Act X of 1877, was taken, for the first time, in the Court of appeal; an application to set aside the sale, on the ground that it had taken place without proclamation made, having been rejected by the Court of First Instance, which found that proclamation had been made.

Held, that the objection was taken too late, although, if properly taken in the Court of First Instance, it would have been good to the extent that not stating the amount of the revenue was an irregularity; substantial damage, resulting from it, remaining to be proved, as required by s. 311 of Act X of 1877.

Held, also, that inadequacy of price having been alleged as substantial damage, without having been proved to be the effect of the non-statement of the revenue, the applicant had not (as required by s. 311) proved, to the satisfaction of the Court, that he had sustained substantial damage by reason of such irregularity.

APPEAL from a decree (22nd April 1881) of the High Court reversing a decree (25th September 1880) of the Officiating Subordinate Judge of Zillah Tirhoot.

This appeal arose out of an order made by the High Court in its Appellate Jurisdiction in reference to the sale of fourteen villages in the Tirhoot District, in execution of a decree which had been obtained by the appellants against the respondents. In 1879 on two separate dates, 15th September and 20th November, the right, title, and interest of the respondents in twenty villages in that district were sold in execution, and purchased by the appellants, leave having been granted to them to bid at the sales. The respondents afterwards applied to have the sales set aside, on the ground that [637] the villages had been sold at an inadequate price, attachment processes not having been executed, and the sale proclamation not having been published in the villages.

This application having been rejected by the Subordinate Judge, who found that the sale proclamations had been published, the High Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) on appeal, while maintaining the finding of the lower Court as to the fact of the proclamations having taken place, reversed its decision, and set aside the sale.

The High Court afterwards, on the 19th September 1881, reviewed its judgment as to six of the villages.

The judgment (22nd April 1881) on appeal was as follows :—

“ The application was made on the ground that a property of a very large value was sold at a grossly inadequate price, attachment processes and sale proclamations not having been duly executed and published in the villages. Upon both these points the lower Court has found against the appellants. As regards the adequacy or otherwise of the value, the finding is manifestly against the weight of the evidence. Of the 20 villages sold, 19 were let in ticca by two leases in favour of the respondents. The net rent payable annually, under the two leases, was Rs. 4,172 and odd. The leases also cover 20 villages, one of which has not been sold. There is evidence to shew that the twentieth village sold, and which is not covered by the lease, is of comparatively more value than the unsold village of the lease. Therefore, upon the evidence, it may be safely taken that the villages sold yielded annually a little over Rs. 4,172. The lower Court remarks that the appellants adduced no evidence to show what is the general rate of value of landed property in the district. It is true that no direct evidence has been given upon that point; but instances in which property has been sold in the district, at not less than 20 years' purchase, have been proved. Calculating at that rate, it is clear that the villages sold are worth about Rs. 60,000.

“ Upon the question, whether the sale proclamations were duly published, we do not think that the finding of the lower Court is wrong; but it may be reasonably supposed that the non-specification of the Government revenue in the sale pro-[658]clamations published is one of the causes which caused the diminution in the price. Such a mistake or omission is an irregularity contemplated by s. 311 of the Civil Procedure Code—Girdhari Singh v. Hurdeo Narain (L. R., 3 I. A., 230). It is true that this irregularity was not made one of the grounds of the appellant's application in the lower Court, but it is patent upon the face of the proceedings.

"We therefore reverse the decision of the lower Court and set aside the sale of the mouzahs in question."

In review of the above the judgment was as follows :—

"The judgment of this Court proceeded upon the ground that the Government revenue of the mouzahs sold (the auction-sale of which was sought to be set aside) was not specified in the sale proclamation, and we were of opinion that that was such an irregularity as really affected the prices which those mouzahs fetched at the auction-sale. We further found that the prices which were paid by the petitioners, who were the purchasers and decree-holders, were inadequate.

"It is contended on behalf of the petitioners now before us, that in respect of six mouzahs, namely, Badwa, Bazitpur, Sarsawa, Shafipur, Jahangira and Arazi Gungharar Hardaspur, the ground upon which the judgment of this Court proceeds is not applicable, inasmuch as the Government revenue of these six mouzahs was specified in the sale proclamation. It is admitted now by the learned pleader, who appears on behalf of the judgment-debtors, that in respect of these mouzahs the Government revenue was specified in the sale proclamation; but he contends that in stating the revenue of Bazitpur, instead of putting Rs. 547 odd annas, which is the correct amount, the amount mentioned in the sale proclamation of that mouzah was Rs. 500, and a similar mistake is pointed out in respect of Jahangira, the correct amount being Rs. 335-7-9, and the amount mentioned in the sale proclamation having been Rs. 345. It is not denied that in respect of the other mouzahs, the Government revenue was correctly specified. Therefore, as regards those four mouzahs, our order is not right and must be set aside. With reference to Bazitpur and Jahangira, the mistakes are so trivial and unimportant that we do not think that they in any way affected the prices of those mouzahs.

"We are, therefore, of opinion that in respect of all these six mouzahs, our judgment is not right; and we accordingly amend it, by directing that the appeal of the judgment-debtors, in respect of these six mouzahs, should be dismissed. In all other respects our judgment will stand."

On this appeal Mr. Macnaghten, Q. C., and Mr. J. T. Woodroffe appeared for the Appellants.

It was argued for the appellants that the omission to state the revenue assessed on the villages, described in the proclamations of the intended sales, was not a fatal irregularity, because it had not been shown to have caused substantial injury to the applicant. The burden of showing such injury was upon him; also, the objection could not be effectively taken for the first time in the Court of Appeal, which was not in a position to find this substantial injury. The Appellate Court had attempted to find it in the inadequacy of price; but that inadequacy had not been connected with the irregularity, as effect with cause; nor was there any recorded evidence on which the Appellate Court could have arrived at this result. Moreover, the omission to state the revenue having taken place, in regard to some, but not in regard to all, of the villages, (as appeared from the review), while inadequacy of price was taken to have resulted in reference to all, that general inadequacy, if occasioned at all appeared not to be traceable to the omission. Girdhari Singh v. Hurdeo Narain Singh (L. R., 3 I. A., 230) was cited.

The Respondents did not appear.

Their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by

Sir B. Peacock.—This was an application to set aside a sale of certain property in execution of a decree in consequence of irregularity. The application was made under s. 311 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1877, chap. X. By that section it is enacted that "the decree-holder or any person whose immoveable property has been sold under this chapter may apply [660] to the Court to set aside the sale on the ground of a material irregularity in publishing or conducting it; but no sale shall be set aside on the ground of irregularity unless the applicant proves to the satisfaction of the Court that he has sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity." Irregularity, therefore, alone is not a ground for setting aside a sale. There must be some substantial injury in consequence of the irregularity, and that must be proved by the applicant. It has also been held that inadequate price of itself is not a sufficient ground for setting aside a sale, unless there is irregularity. The question, therefore, in this case is whether an irregularity did occur, and, if so, whether that irregularity caused injury to the applicant; the injury complained of being the inadequacy of the price which was realised at the sale. The principal irregularity complained of was that no notification of the sale was properly published. Section 286 of the same Code provides that "sales in execution of decrees shall be conducted by an officer of the Court, or by any other person whom the Court may appoint, and, except as provided in s. 296,* shall be made by public auction in manner hereinafter mentioned." Then s. 287 says, "When any property is ordered to be sold by public auction in execution of a decree, the Court shall cause a proclamation of the intended sale to be made in the language of such Court. Such proclamation shall state the time and place of sale, and shall specify as fairly and accurately as possible the property to be sold; the revenue assessed upon the estate, or part of the estate, when the property to be sold is an interest in an estate, or a part of an estate paying revenue to the Government"; and certain other things.

In addition to the irregularity as regards the notification of the sale, another alleged irregularity was complained of, viz., that the attachment was not properly notified. Whether the notice of attachment not having been properly published would affect the sale, or be an irregularity in conducting the sale, it is not necessary to inquire, inasmuch as that point was given up by the applicant on the trial before the Judge. The question then is solely in respect of the alleged irregularity in the proclamation of the sale. The applicant contended that the proclamation [661] had not been published. He did not contend that in the proclamation the particulars were not properly described as required by the Act. He said in effect that no proclamation had been published. The parties went down to trial upon that point, evidence was given, and the learned Judge of the first Court held that the proclamation had been published, and the High Court affirmed the decision of the first Judge in that respect. There are, therefore, two concurrent findings of the Courts that a proclamation was published.

The Judge consequently refused to set aside the sale. The parties appealed to the High Court. They never took any objection in their grounds of appeal to the form of the proclamation, or stated that there was an irregularity in not having stated all that was required by the Act, and, amongst other things, the revenue which was assessed upon the estate. When the case came before the High Court it was discovered that in the proclamations which were published the amount of revenue had not been stated, and the High Court at that time considered that all the proclamations were alike, and that in each of

* [Sec. 296:—If the property to be sold be a negotiable instrument or a share in any public Company or Corporation, the Court may, instead of directing the sale to be made by public auction, authorize the sale of such instrument or share through a broker at the market-rate of the day.]

the proclamations with regard to the 20 mouzahs which were sold the amount of revenue had not been stated. It may be inferred from the grounds of review that the Court themselves first took the point ; but whether it was taken by the Court or by the applicant is immaterial, because their Lordships are of opinion that the objection could not be taken for the first time in the Court of Appeal. Even if the objection could have been properly taken at that stage of the proceedings, if no question was raised before the lower Court as to whether any injury had been sustained by the applicant by reason of the proclamations not stating the amount of revenue, that question was never tried in the lower Court, and no evidence had been given with reference to it.

The objection, if it had been properly taken in the first instance, would have been good to this extent, that not stating the amount of revenue was an irregularity ; but even then there would have been something more to be proved than the mere irregularity,—it would have been necessary to go on and show that substantial damage had been sustained by the applicant in consequence of that irregularity. No evidence was given upon that subject [662] before the lower Court, though by s. 311 the onus lay upon the applicant to prove, to the satisfaction of the Court, that he had sustained substantial damage in consequence of the irregularity ; nor was there any finding of the lower Court upon it, because the question was never raised.

The High Court, having held that the non-statement of the amount of revenue in the proclamation was an irregularity, proceeded to try the question whether the irregularity had caused substantial injury to the applicant. They say : “ But it may be reasonably supposed that the non-specification of the Government revenue in the sale proclamations published is one of the causes which caused the diminution in the price.” There was no evidence at all on the subject. It appears to their Lordships that the High Court could not, without evidence and upon a mere supposition, properly find that the non-statement of the revenue in the proclamation did cause an injury to the applicant by causing an inadequate price to be bid at the sale.

The High Court, however, upon the ground that there was an irregularity, and that it had caused substantial injury to the applicant, reversed the decision of the lower Court. Upon that a review was applied for, and then it was discovered that the objection as to the non-statement of the revenue did not apply to six of the mouzahs and six of the sales ; and the High Court, having found that the proclamation in respect of those six did contain the amount of the revenue, set aside their former decision as to them, and upheld it as to the other fourteen. But when they upheld the sale as to the six they never adverted to the fact that, as they had fallen into a mistake as to them, they might equally have fallen into a mistake as to the other fourteen. They found that the inadequacy of price as regards the six did not arise from the non-statement of the amount of revenue. They might, therefore, have reasonably supposed that their former supposition, that the inadequacy of price as to the fourteen was occasioned by the non-statement in the notice of sale of the amount of revenue, was as much without foundation as it was as to the six ; but instead of that they upheld their decision as to the fourteen, and set it aside as regarded the six. The question now is whether the judgment of the High Court as regards the four-[663]teen is correct in holding that there was an irregularity in the non-statement of the amount of revenue in the proclamation which could be relied on upon appeal, and that the appellant had sustained substantial injury by reason of that irregularity.

Their Lordships think that it was too late for the applicant to make the objection, and even if it were not too late for him to make the objection before the High Court, there was no evidence to justify the High Court in arriving at the conclusion that there was inadequacy of price occasioned by the non-statement of the revenue in the sale proclamation.

Under these circumstances, their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to reverse the decision of the High Court, and to affirm the decision of the first Judge. They think that the respondents must pay the costs of this appeal and the costs in the High Court.

Appeal allowed.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 7—Minority—Right to sue—Personal exemption—Assignment by minor.

Under s. 7 of the Limitation Act, a minor has, in respect of a cause of action accruing during his minority, a right to sue at any time within three years of attaining his majority; but if during his minority, or if after attaining his majority and within three years thereof, such person assigns all his right and interests to a third party, who is sui juris, the latter cannot claim the exemptions accorded to the minor by s. 7 of the [664] Limitation Act, but is subject to the ordinary law of limitation, governing suits in which relief of the same nature is claimed.

THESE cases were referred to a Full Bench by WILSON and FIELD, JJ., on the 6th of September. In addition to the facts stated it may be noticed that in No. 434 of 1881 the sale to the plaintiff was a private sale, and the vendor Rajoni Nath Chuckerbutty was made a party-defendant to the suit. In No. 1927 of 1881 the sale to the plaintiffs was made in execution of a money decree against the minors. In this suit also the minors were made defendants.

The reference in both cases was as follows:—

"No. 434 of 1881.—The question raised upon this appeal is a very short one, but it is important.

"Rajoni Nath Chuckerbutty, a minor, was entitled to the lands in suit. During his minority he was dispossessed. On attaining his majority, he assigned his interest to the plaintiff, and this suit was brought within three years of Rajoni Nath's coming of age, but more than twelve years after the dispossession. The question is whether the suit is barred by limitation.

"Had the question been wholly a new one, we should have been prepared to hold that it is not. By s. 7 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877): 'If a person entitled to institute a suit.....be, at the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned, a minor.....he may institute the suit within the same period after the disability has ceased, as would otherwise have been allowed from the time prescribed therefor.' "Nothing in this section..... shall be deemed to extend for more than three years from the cessation of the disability.....the period within which any suit must be instituted.'

* Full Bench Reference made by Mr. Justice Wilson and Mr. Justice Field, dated the 6th September 1882, in appeals from Appellate Decrees, Nos. 434 and 1927 of 1881.

"By s. 29, 'at the determination of the period hereby limited to any person for instituting a suit for possession of any property, his right to such property shall be extinguished.'

"At the time when Rajoni Nath came of age, he had a good title to his property and a valid right to sue for it, which right of suit had three years still to run. We do not see why this right of property, with the right of suit incident to it, should not be assignable as other such rights are.

"If this view be not correct, and the right to sue after attaining [665] majority is limited to the person attaining majority, very incongruous results might follow. For example, if he died the day after he came of age, his right of suit, and, with it, his right of property must die with him : his representatives could not sue. Whereas if he died the day before coming of age, his representatives would have three years to sue.

"It was argued before us that the express mention in s. 7 of the right of the representatives to sue in case of death during disability, supported the view that the representatives took no benefit in any other case. But that does not seem to us sound reasoning. In the case of death under disability, it was necessary to prescribe a new point of time from which limitation was to run. And therefore special mention of the case was necessary.

"We were, however, referred to a case of Mahomed Arsud Chowdhry v. Yakooob Ally (15 B. L. R., 357), in which MARKBY and MORRIS, JJ., took a different view of the construction of s. 7 of Act IX of 1871, holding that the privilege given to the person, who was under disability, was limited to himself personally and did not extend to his assignee.

"It is true that that case was decided upon an Act different from that now in force ; but we are unable to find any material difference between the one Act and the other, so far as the present question is concerned. We, therefore, think it right to refer to a Full Bench the question whether this suit is barred by limitation.

"No. 1927 of 1881.—This case gives rise to a question very similar to one which we have already referred to a Full Bench in another case (No. 434 of 1881), with reference to s. 7 of the Limitation Act.

"In that case an infant attained his full age and then assigned his interest, and the assignee sued within three years of his assignor's majority.

"In this case the infants' interest was assigned while they were under age, and they have not attained majority. The assignee had sued within three years of the assignment.

It appears to us that the two cases must be decided upon the [666] same principle ; but as there is this difference between them, we think it right to refer this case also to the Full Bench.

* [Sec. 7 :—If a person entitled to sue be, at the time the right to sue accrued, a minor, or insane or an idiot, he may institute the suit within the same period after the disability has ceased, or (when he is at the time of the accrual affected by two disabilities) after both disabilities have ceased, as would otherwise have been allowed from the time prescribed therefor in the third column of the second schedule hereto annexed.

When his disability continues up to his death, his representative in interest may institute the suit within the same period after the death as would otherwise have been allowed from the time prescribed therefor in the third column of the same schedule.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to extend, for more than three years from the cessation of the disability or the death of the person affected thereby, the period within which the suit must be brought.]

The following Judgments were delivered by the Full Bench.—

No. 434 of 1881.

Garth, C.J.—I think that the question referred to us should be answered in the affirmative.

It seems to me that the provisions in the Limitation Acts, which relieve minors and others under disability from the rules which are binding upon other people, are purely personal exemptions, and must be considered as attaching to the person only, and not to the property, or the title, of those who are under disability.

The only reason, I conceive, why such persons are not subjected to the ordinary rules of limitation, is that the law considers them incapable of forming a proper judgment as to bringing suits, or otherwise managing their own affairs.

But this reason does not apply to the property of such persons, or the titles by which they hold it; nor does there seem to be any good ground why the protection thus afforded to them should be extended to purchasers from them.

It may perhaps seem rather hard, that in a case like the present, a man purchasing property from a minor, which is not in the minor's possession, should at once be disabled from bringing a suit to recover it; but after all, this is only one of those difficulties, against which purchasers, if properly advised, can easily protect themselves. In this particular instance, the plaintiff, instead of taking from the minor an absolute transfer of property, which was not in his possession, might have entered into a contract for purchase, to be completed when the property had been recovered by suit.

[667] But, on the other hand, if the law were, as the plaintiff contends, that a purchaser when he buys property from a person under disability buys the exemption from limitation along with it, anomalies without end would be the consequence.

Thus a minor of three years old, who had been out of possession of property for two years, might transfer it to a person of full age. The purchaser, if the minor were an Englishman, would then have 18 years within which to bring his suit, although during all that time he would be under no disability and perfectly capable of managing his own affairs.

Again, a purchaser buying the estate of a lunatic, who continued to be a lunatic for 60 or 70 years after the sale, would, during the whole of that period, be freed from the law of limitation; and the person in possession of the property might, after the lapse of 60 or 70 years, be sued by the purchaser, or his heirs, who had no excuse during all that time for sleeping upon his rights.

I entirely agree with the learned Judges who decided the case of Mahomed Arsud Chowhry v. Yakooob Ally, (15 B. L. R., 357) with regard to the proper construction of s. 7 of the Limitation Act of 1871; and I think also, that the fact of the minor's representative in interest being expressly allowed by that section a certain time for bringing his suit, in those cases where the minor dies during the disability, seems clearly to indicate the intention of the Legislature, that in other cases the assignee of a minor is to have no special privilege.

But apart from what I consider to be the meaning and the reason of the Limitation Act, I think an extremely strong argument against the plaintiff's contention arises from the fact, that our attention was not called to a single authority (except the case just cited), in which any attempt has been made to extend the exemption which is given to persons under disability to purchasers from those persons. If there had been any ground for the plaintiff's contention, we should have expected points of doubt and difficulty to have constantly arisen from such a state of the law.

I think, therefore, that this appeal should be allowed; that the [668] decision of the lower Appellate Court should be reversed, and the judgment of the Munsif restored; and I also think that the defendant should have his costs in all the Courts.

No. 1927 of 1881.

I think that this case must be governed by the same principle as the other; and that consequently the judgments of the lower Courts should be set aside, and the plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

Mitter, J.—I am also of opinion that the question referred to us should be answered in the affirmative.

The express mention of the legal representatives in the third paragraph of s. 7 clearly indicates that the representatives in any other case do not take any benefit under it. But it has been said that the express mention of the legal representatives was made, because in the case of death under disability, it was necessary to prescribe a new point of time from which limitation was to run. But suppose the property of a person, who was under disability at the time when he became entitled to institute a suit in respect of it, he sold, and after the sale he dies, the provisions of the third paragraph of s. 7 would not apply to the purchaser, this being so, if the provisions of s. 7 would apply at all to the purchaser, his case must come under the first paragraph of the section qualified by the proviso.

But the language of the first paragraph cannot be made applicable to a case like the one supposed. It provides that the suit may be instituted within the same period after the disability has ceased as would otherwise have been allowed. But in the case supposed there could not be any cessation of disability, because the death took place when the disability was continuing.

It has been suggested that the disability in the section means the disability to sue, and it may be reasonably considered to have ceased on the sale of the property in respect of which the person under disability is entitled to bring a suit; and therefore in the case of a sale the time would run, under the first paragraph of the section, from the date of the sale.

But it seems to me that this construction is not borne out by the language used by the Legislature. The section speaks [669] of the cessation of the disability, i. e., the disability of the person who was entitled to the property. By the sale of the property his disability does not come to an end. The ability of the purchaser to institute the suit is not the same thing as the cessation of the disability of the person whose property is sold. Then, again, suppose the person on whose behalf the property is purchased is himself a minor, or insane, or an idiot, the date of the sale in that case could not reasonably be considered as the cessation of the disability. It would be almost impossible to apply the language of paragraph 1 of the section to a case like that.

I entirely agree with the learned Judges who decided the case of Mahomed Arsud Chowdhry v. Yakooob Ally (15 B. L. R., 357), in thinking that the privilege under s. 7 is purely a personal one. It has been said that this construction leads to anomalous results; because there may be cases in which the right in a particular property may be still vested in a minor, or insane, or an idiot, and yet such right would not be saleable. There is no incongruity in this, because the privilege granted is to the minor, insane, or the idiot himself, but not to a stranger, who may choose to become a purchaser. Then as to the creditors of such persons, they cannot complain of any hardship, because they cannot reasonably claim any higher rights than they could have claimed if their debtors had not been under any disability. Then again the existence of a right does not carry with it, necessarily, the power of alienation of such right. For example, the right to recover a contract debt is not extinguished after the lapse of the period of limitation prescribed for enforcing it (see s. 28 of the Limitation Act), still it is not alienable after the lapse of that time in the same sense in which the right of a minor, insane, or an idiot in a particular property, moveable or immoveable, in respect of which he is entitled to bring a suit is not alienable after the lapse of the ordinary period of limitation.

On the other hand, any other construction of the section would lead to incongruous results. For example, the case of a purchaser buying the estate of a lunatic, which has been [670] put as an illustration by my Lord the Chief Justice, shows how inconvenient it would be if the construction put by the lower Appellate Court be adopted.

McDonell, J.—I would answer in both these cases the question referred to us in the affirmative, and generally for the reasons given by the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice MITTER.

Prinsep, J.—I agree in holding that under the terms of s. 7 of the Limitation Act XV of 1877, the privilege conferred is personal to minors, insanes, or idiots, and cannot be transferred inter vivos. I am not prepared to say whether this was intentional, or is due to an oversight on the part of the Legislature.

Wilson, J.—The questions raised in these cases are, to my mind, questions of considerable difficulty. I have felt grave doubts as to how they ought to be answered, and those doubts have not been removed. I agree that the construction placed upon the Act by the majority of the Court is one which it may fairly bear; but it involves serious anomalies and inconveniences. Thus, as appears from the first of the cases referred, a person who has just come of age may have property, and yet be practically unable to sell or dispose of it in any way. It appears from the second case that the same person, whether still under age or not, may have property, and the right to sue for it at any time for years to come; but that the property is wholly out of reach of his creditors.

If it be said that the difficulty may be removed by the purchaser's obtaining a power-of-attorney to sue in his vendor's name, there seem to be several answers. That is a mode of procedure not in ordinary use in this country. It would not be available for a purchaser in execution; and if it were, an infant cannot give a power-of-attorney. And if the infant did sell after he came of age with a power-of-attorney, the right of the purchaser would still be wholly dependent upon the life of his vendor. If the vendor died before suit, no suit could be brought. If he died pending the suit, it could not be revived, for the cause of action would not survive.

[671] I am by no means sure that another construction of the Act is not equally legitimate, and one which would remove many of these anomalies. I am by no means sure that we ought not to hold that the person who is or has been under disability, having in him a right of property and a right to sue for that property, has a right to assign both, not because there are any words in the Act making them assignable, for there are none, but because property is by the general law ordinarily assignable, and, with it, the right of suit for its recovery. If we were so to hold and also to hold, as I think we well might, that an alienation of an infant's estate is, so far as that estate is concerned, a termination of the disability, we should, I think, get rid of most of the difficulties of the subject. The result would be, that a purchaser of an infant's estate, who purchased after the ordinary period for limitation had passed, would have three years from his purchase within which to sue; and a purchaser from one who had attained his full age would have three years from the date of majority.

I do not dissent from the judgment of the majority, but I feel great doubt about the matter.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 15th March, 1883.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Judonath Ghose.....Plaintiff

Schoene Kilburn & Co.....Defendants.*

Landlord and tenant—Dur-maurasi mokurari tenure—Notice of relinquishment—Surrender of lease.

A tenure under a dur-maurasi mokurari lease of land, which is not let for agricultural purposes, cannot be put an end to by a mere relinquishment, on the part of the lessee although after notice to the landlord.

Per FIELD, J.—The principle laid down in the case of Heera Lall Pal v. [672] Neel Monee Pal (20 W. R. , 383), where it was held that a patnidar cannot, of his own option, relinquish his tenure, is applicable to all intermediate tenures between the zamindar and the cultivator of the soil, except those held on farming leases.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1866 of 1881, against the decree of Baboo Kedareshur Roy, Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, dated the 30th August 1881, affirming the decree of Baboo Huri Nath Roy, Officiating Munsif of Serampore, dated the 29th December 1880.

THIS suit was brought by the plaintiff for the recovery of Rs. 532-8, being the balance of rent due for the year 1879 by the defendants, under the following dur-maurasi mokurari settlement which, he alleged he had made with them on the 10th Assin 1282 (25th September 1875).

"Our Company having applied for a dur-maurasi mokurari pottah of five beegahs of land, according to measurement, within the undermentioned boundaries, you give us a dur-maurasi mokurari pottah, at the fixed annual rent of Rs. 625, and we give you this kabuliat. From this day, we become owners of the said five beegahs of land under the dur-maurasi pottah right, and become vested with the right of making gift and alienation, and being vested with the rights that you possess, and paying the rent of the said land, we and our heirs and representatives from generation to generation shall forever enjoy and possess the same, directly or by sub-letting the land, building houses, digging tanks, making gardens, and establishing a coal depôt, or in any other way we like."

The defence set up in the written statement was that by a notice, dated the 29th April 1879, the defendants had informed the plaintiff that they would give up the land in suit in the month of Assar 1286 (June—July 1879). They then paid the rent up to the end of Assar, and since then had ceased to hold possession of the land.

Baboo Nilnadhuh Bose for the Appellant.

Baboo Juggudanund Mookerjee for the Respondents.

The following Judgments were delivered by the Court (GARTH, C.J., and FIELD, J.)

Garth, C.J. (after shortly stating the facts, continued) :—I think that both the lower Courts have taken an erroneous view of the law in this case. In the Munsif's Court two issues were raised*: first, whether the defendants did relinquish the land; and, secondly, whether the relinquishment was good in law. With regard to [673] the first point, which was a question of fact, the Munsif found that the defendants had relinquished the land, and that they had given the notice to quit, upon which they relied. And upon the second point, namely, whether the notice was good in law, the Munsif found that it was, holding, apparently, that a lessee, under a lease of this kind, was at liberty, after due notice to his landlord, to relinquish his lease, and that upon relinquishing it, and hoding no further possession of it, his obligation was at an end.

The Subordinate Judge appears to me to be rather doubtful about confirming the view of the law which the Munsif had laid down. He says : "That the defendants gave three months' previous notice of their intention of relinquishing the holding, and afterwards actually relinquished the same, has been satisfactorily proved. Plaintiff could not prove that the defendants occupied the land after relinquishment." Then he goes on to say (by way, as it seems to me, of making himself secure whether his view of the law was right or no) : "It appears that the plaintiff brought this suit after more than a year; his long silence to make any objection may be considered as his accepting the relinquishment, for if he did not do so, he could have given defendants a notice that he would not accept. I, therefore, think that he must have consented to the relinquishment."

It has been boldly argued before us, on behalf of the respondent, that the Munsif was right, and, indeed, that both Courts were right, (if the Subordinate Judge intended to agree with the Munsif), in saying that the tenant, under a lease of this character, had a right to relinquish the land at his option, whenever he pleased, upon giving due notice to his landlord; and it was also contended, that, whether that was so or not, the notice of relinquishment being proved to have been given, the facts of the case justified the Subordinate Judge in finding that the landlord, the plaintiff, had consented to the relinquishment.

Now, in order to see what the question really is, and what is the true nature of the lease with which we are dealing, I will read the language of the kabuliat itself. (His Lordship read the document and continued).

[674] Of course the terms of this lease are wholly inconsistent with any idea of its creating a ryoti tenure. It is in the nature of a building lease of valuable property, because, in addition to the yearly rental of Rs. 625, which is to be paid for five highas of land, there was also a premium of Rs. 1,150 paid by the lessees.

Now it is said that a lessee, who holds under a lease of this kind, is entitled to relinquish his land at any time, and without assigning any reason, if he only gives due notice to the landlord.

Such a contention appears to me absurd. The bargain would then be entirely one-sided. If the learned Junior Government Pleader were right, the lessee might, under such a lease, do what he liked with the property, and then leave it. If there were trees on the land, he might cut them down and remove them; he might excavate pits, or alter the disposition of the land in any way he pleased; and then if he found that the alterations he had made answered his purpose, he might abide by his bargain; but if he found that he had made a bad speculation, and that the alterations were not likely to be beneficial, he might throw up the land and cancel his lease, although the landlord in the meantime might have had good opportunities of disposing of the land to advantage. This would be such an unfair and one-sided bargain, that I should require very strong authority to satisfy me that such was the true view of the law.

We, accordingly, pressed the learned Pleader for some authority in support of his view, and, so far as I can see the only authorities which he has cited, so far from supporting his contention, are decidedly opposed to it.

He has alluded (amongst others) to a case, decided in 1873 by Mr. Justice JACKSON and Mr. Justice DWARKANATH MITTER—Heera Lal Pal v. Neel Monee Pal (20 W. R., 383)—, which is decidedly against him.

That was a suit, as this is, for rent which was due under a patni, and the patnidar contended that he had surrendered the patni, and had a right to do so, and that he had thus terminated his obligation for rent. Mr. Justice JACKSON in giving judgment says: "The point which we reserved for consideration in this case is, whether it is optional with the patnidar to surrender the patni which he holds at any time, and to plead such surrender in answer [675] to a suit for rent. We are clearly of opinion that, whether or not the Civil Court might, upon sufficient ground, give relief in a suit brought to dissolve a contract between the zamindar and his patnidar, it certainly is not open to a patnidar, of his own choice to throw up the patni, and, by so doing escape his liability to pay rent. We do not say that the contract is indissoluble, because many circumstances might arise in which the interference of a Court of Justice might fairly be invoked to put an end to it, but the dissolution of such a contract must, we think, be an act of the Court and the result of proper enquiry, and cannot be taken by the patnidar alone, and pleaded in answer to a suit for rent."

This is a direct authority, as it seems to me, against the defendants' contention, but having regard to the fact, that my learned brother, who has been for twenty years in this country, both in executive and judicial capacity, has never even heard of such a contention as has been pressed upon us, I do not think I need say more on this part of this case.

The only other point that remains to be noticed is as to the supposed consent of the notice by the plaintiff. It was contended that there were sufficient grounds in point of law for the Subordinate Judge to find that the lessor has accepted the relinquishment which was tendered by the lessees.

Now what happened was this; I assume, of course, that a notice was given by the lessees to the plaintiff that they would relinquish the lease at the end of Assar 1286; and it appears that a day or two before Assar they paid the rent due for Assar, and they intimated at the same time that they would leave the premises at the end of the month, which they did. Nothing appears to have been said by the plaintiff on this occasion, nor was any communication received from him; and when the lessees set up that they had relinquished the property, he denied having received any notice. However, it was proved that a notice had been sent by post, though it is not suggested that the plaintiff ever said anything which could be construed into an express assent. Now was this enough, in point of law, to justify the Subordinate Judge in finding an assent on the part of the lessor to the relinquishment? I am clearly of opinion that it was not. A man who is bound by [676] lease to pay his rent cannot, by merely informing his landlord that he is going to relinquish the land, get rid of his obligation, and the mere fact that the landlord silently receives the notice, which the lessee had no legal right to give, cannot be construed, in my opinion, into an assent to the relinquishment; and no Court has any right under such circumstances to find that the landlord did assent.

I am clearly of opinion, that the judgment of the lower Courts should be reversed, and that the plaintiff's claim should be decreed with costs in all the Courts.

Field, J.—This was a suit for the recovery of Rs. 532-8, being the rent of the year 1286, together with interest, after giving credit for certain payments made.

The defence to the suit was that a notice was issued on 29th of April 1879, corresponding with the 17th of Bysakh 1286, by the defendant of his intention to give up the land, for the rent of which this suit has been brought, and that this notice was followed up, on the 8th of July 1879, by an actual relinquishment.

Upon this defence one of the issues fixed by the Munsif was, whether the relinquishment was good in law, and upon this point the Munsif says: "With reference to the other contention of the defendant, I think that it is tenable. What is a dur-maurasi mokurari tenure? It is an ordinary contract to pay the rent as long as the tenant would occupy the land, and that the landlord would not be able to eject him or enhance his rent, for which consideration a price is paid. The occupation of the land is the consideration for payment of the rent, and the tenant can, at any moment, say (of course giving the landlord reasonable notice) take back your land and let me go."

On the hearing of this appeal a question was raised as to whether upon the appeal to the Judge in the Court below the question was raised as to whether a tenure of this nature could be relinquished. I think there can be no doubt that this question was raised in the fourth ground of appeal, and this being so, it appears to me clear that the contention of the plaintiff, throughout the whole course of the case, has been that a tenure [677] of this nature, that is a dur-maurasi mokurari, could not be put an end to by a mere relinquishment on the part of the lessee.

As to the question whether the plaintiff accepted the relinquishment I think there can be no doubt. It was no doubt very wrong for him to deny that which we must take to have been clearly proved, viz., the service of the notice of relinquishment upon him, but according to a principle that has been laid down by the Privy Council we must not, in dealing with this case, allow ourselves to be led to decide otherwise than according to law, because the plaintiff has been ill-advised, or misled into doing, in the conduct of his suit, that which was beyond doubt very wrong and improper.

The one question then which we have to decide is, whether a tenure, such as that with which this case is concerned, can be terminated at the will of the lessee by a relinquishment.

Let us see what this tenure is. It is quite clear that it is not a lease of agricultural land. The contents of the kabuliati shew this very distinctly. This being so, the provisions of the Rent Act have no application, and the defendants could not, under the provisions of s. 20 of that Act, relinquish their holding.

But it is contended that according to a well-known custom in this country, any person holding a permanent interest intermediate between the zamindar and the cultivator may, of his own option, unless he has restrained himself by an express provision to the contrary, relinquish such interest or tenure.

I am bound to say that this is a proposition which I have never heard advanced until this case came before us; and before the hearing of this case, my impression has always been that no such tenure can be terminated unless with the consent of the landlord, i.e., apart from any question of a sale for arrears of rent brought about by the action of the landlord himself.

In support of the proposition advanced for the defendants three cases have been quoted to us from the reports of the Sudder Dewany Adawlat. The first of these cases is that of Kowla Kant Mukerjee v. Ram Mohun Gosain (2 Sel. Rep., 325). The marginal note of that case, which is substantially correct, is as follows:—"The right of landholders of patni taluks of [678] the second or lower degrees in the zamindari of Burdwan, is not liable to be cancelled by the resignation of the patnidar who granted the taluk. It can only be cancelled by a public sale for arrears of revenue." This stands to reason. If an individual having taken a patni taluk from the zamindar, and having, according to the well-known custom of that district, granted a number of darpatnies for a considerable amount of salami, could afterwards go to the zamindar, resign his patni, and thereby destroy the interest of the darpatnidars, the door would be opened for a large amount of fraud. Of course, the zamindar may, if he chooses, accept the relinquishment of the patni, but, by doing so, he is in no better position than an assignee of the patnidar. This case certainly does not show that, either by the law or custom of the country, a patnidar has any right, of his own option, to relinquish his tenure, and thereby free himself from future liability for rent.

The next case relied upon is that of Rajah Kishen Chunder Bahadoor v. Shunkeree Dassee (7 Sel. Rep., 174). Now, in the first place, that was a case, not of an intermediate tenure in the nature of a taluk, but a case of a farming lease; and it further appears that proceedings had been taken to enhance the rent, and that after those proceedings, the lessee, alleging that, according to the valuation of the officer deputed for the purpose of increasing the assessment, an excessive rent had been imposed, sought to resign the lease. It appears to me that this case also does not support the proposition advanced before us. It is just and reasonable that a person who takes a maurasi lease at a fixed rent should be bound to hold the land so demised, and pay the rent according to the terms of the lease ; but the same justice and the same reason have no application, when one of the most important conditions of the original contract is altered, and the rent is enhanced. The lessee may very justly say to his landlord that, under the original contract, I agreed to pay that rent for the term of the lease. I certainly deny that you can raise the rent and compel me to continue to hold the tenure whether I desire to do so or not.

The third and last case quoted from the report of the Sudder Dewany Adawlat is a case of Omachurn Chuckerbutty v. Hur [679]-chunder Haldar (S. D. A., 1855, p. 205). That was also a case of a farming lease, and the only question decided related to the stamp required for an istafa or relinquishment. This observation disposes of that case as an authority upon the question before us.

It thus appears to me that none of the cases quoted from the Sudder Dewany Adawlat Reports support the allegation that has been made before us, while there are many cases to be found in those reports which go to shew the contrary.

The very learned Chief Justice has dealt with the case of a patni tenure in which it was distinctly held that a patnidar cannot, of his own option, relinquish his tenure, and, so far as I understand the law of this country, the principle of that case is applicable to all intermediate tenures between the zamindar and the cultivator of the soil, and in this term tenure I do not here include a farming lease.

I think, therefore, that the alleged relinquishment was no answer to this suit for rent, and that this appeal must be decreed with costs.

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KNIGHT, CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE
 WILSON.

Carlisles, Nephews and Co.....Plaintiffs

 Hurmook Roy and another.....Defendants.*

 Printing—Sale of goods to arrive.*

The defendants contracted to purchase certain piece-goods from the plaintiffs, who were dealers in those goods. The contract of sale was written out on one of the printed forms of the plaintiffs' firm, which forms contained in print, the words "now in course of landing or in the said godowns" and "now on boardship." As a matter of fact, well known to both parties, the goods contracted for were neither in the godowns nor on boardship.

Held, that under the circumstances the printed words above set out formed no part of the contract entered into between the parties.

[680] THIS was a reference from the Chief Judge of the Calcutta Court of Small Causes. The terms of the reference are as follows :—

This suit is brought by the plaintiffs to recover Rs. 678-7-3 as damages by reason of the failure of the defendants to take delivery of certain goods under a contract, dated 11th August 1880.

Certain facts having been admitted by both sides, the parties have practically stated a special case for me to decide on the points of law raised.

The plaintiffs have given up their interest, viz., Rs. 74, and the defendants in turn admitted that Rs. 604-7-3 would be the damages to which the plaintiffs would be entitled if they have legal right on their side.

The contract runs thus—

"The sellers (i.e., the plaintiffs) sell, and the buyers (i.e., the defendants) buy such of the undermentioned goods as have already arrived and are now in the seller's godowns or as may hereafter arrive and be deliverable at the said godowns at the rates specified, viz. :—

* Small Cause Court Reference, from an order made by H. Millett, Esq., Chief Judge of the Calcutta Small Cause Court, dated the 5th of July 1882.

The above is the important part of the contract, which is in English, the italicised words representing the words in writing as distinguished from the printed form of the contract. At the foot one of the defendants made a note in Nagri, of which the following is a translation.

" Hurmook Roy Ram Chunder chintz, shirtings boxes 150, rate 2 annas condition 9 pies. Goods same as before ——— November 20, December 20, January agreement.
20, February 25, March 25, April 20, May 20. Godown due 30 days more condition ——— from date 30th ; goods to be taken according to ——— agreement.

On the same date as this contract the defendants took 40 cases of the same goods (ready goods) under another contract. A suggestion has been made by the defendants' pleader that the Nagri writing, which must control the English, makes a different contract to that stated in the printed form ; but the only difference I can ascertain is, that the defendants say the goods are to be same as before. But the plaintiffs admit that the contract really was for the same class of goods as the defendants had taken before, and, [681] that they (the plaintiffs) have understood it as such. There is therefore no material difference.

Though the contract states it, no cases were, as a matter of fact, in the godown at the time, except those bought under the other contract.

No cases arrived either in November or December, and when they did arrive they were not according to quality. Twenty cases arrived in each of the months of January and February, but they were not according to quality. In March twenty cases arrived according to quality. Notice was given to the defendants, but they declined to take them. This resulted in a correspondence, and on the 5th April 1881, Mr. Camell, the defendants' attorney, wrote a letter to the plaintiffs, of which the following is a portion :—"I am further instructed to state that the contract having been broken by you, my clients contend they are not bound to take delivery of the March instalment, and they therefore decline to take delivery of the 25 cases now offered to them, and they repudiate all liability in respect thereof, and also of the future instalments, and they will defend any action which you may institute against them." The plaintiffs accordingly resold the goods.

In April 20 cases arrived, but they were not according to quality. In May 20 cases arrived according to quality. Notice was given to the defendants, but they refused to take them, and the plaintiffs resold. The main argument adduced on the part of the defendants is, that the contract is an indivisible one for 150 cases, and that as there was a failure on the part of the plaintiffs to perform the former portion of the contract, the defendants in their turn were justified in refusing to accept both the March and subsequent arrivals, Honck v. Muller (L. R. 7 Q. B. D., 92), being cited an authority for the proposition. On the other side it is contended, among other things, that this being a contract to arrive, the plaintiffs are not bound to tender delivery unless the goods arrive. Let us see what the material words of the contract are. They are that the sellers sell and the buyers buy such of the undermentioned goods, i.e., 150 cases specifically described as may hereinafter arrive or be deliverable. There can be no difficulty as to the construction of these words. There is nothing ambiguous about them. They mean clearly that the contract is only for such of the goods as may arrive. It is not a contract that the goods shall arrive. If no goods of the specified quality arrived before March 1881, there was no contract to deliver them, but only a contract to deliver them in case they arrived. But if it were necessary to go further than this and put a construction on the words "to arrive," the same conclusion would be arrived at, because the words "to arrive" have already in Johnson v. Macdonald (9 M. & W., 600) been construed to mean that the goods shall be sold on arrival. Whether this decision is right or wrong need not affect the construction of this contract, because the words "to arrive" would have to be taken in conjunction with the previous portion of the contract. If then the contract was only to sell such of the goods as did [682] arrive, there was no breach on the part of the plaintiffs previous to March 1881. If, on the other hand, there was a contract to buy such of the goods as did arrive, there was a breach on the part of the defendants to take delivery of the March arrival, and the same may be said as regards the May arrival.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree for Rs. 604-7-3.

The defendants' pleader has asked me to refer certain questions to the High Court, which I do in the following form :—

- (1) Is the construction of the contract put upon it the correct one ?
- (2) If any other construction can be put upon the contract, are the plaintiffs entitled to succeed on the facts, as admitted ?
- (3) Does the Nagri writing by defendants at the foot of the contract prevail over or control the printed portion thereof ?
- (4) Are the plaintiffs entitled under the contract to the damages sued for (viz., for the 5th and 7th month's deliveries) when they have failed to deliver the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th, and 6th months' goods ?

Mr. Sale for the plaintiffs was stopped by the Court.

Mr. M. P. Gasper (for the Defendants.)—We are not bound to take these goods. The sellers warranted that at the time of the contract these goods were partly on boardship, and partly in their own godowns, neither of which was the fact. The goods were not according to quality—Honck v. Muller (L. R. 7 Q. B. D., 92) ; Hoare v. Rennie (5 H. & N., 19).

Mr. Sale (in reply)—Suppose there were the warranty stated, that would be a separate contract, and be no defence to this suit. GARTH, C. J., referred to Johnson v. Macdonald (9 M. & W., 600). In truth, the words relied on by the other side, though they are printed in the paper containing the contract, yet form no part of it whatever, and never were intended to form part of it.

[The Court intimated they would inspect the original contract, before delivering judgment.]

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and WILSON, J.) was delivered by Garth, C. J.—We think that the judgment of the Court below is correct. It is satisfactory to have seen the original contract, because it seems clear that the printed words in the margin "now in course of landing, &c.," were merely the common form generally used by the plaintiffs' firm, and were not intended to constitute [683] any part of this particular contract. The argument, therefore, which was addressed to us upon those words entirely fails.

We think that the questions referred to us should be answered as follows :—The first and fourth questions should be answered in the affirmative. The second question of course, does not arise ; and as to the third, we do not see that the Nagri writing is at all inconsistent with the English contract.

The defendants must pay the costs of this reference.

NOTES.

[Compare with this case, the following observations of Lord PENZANCE in the House of Lords case of Dudgeon v. Pembroke (1877) 2 A. C. 284 at 293 :— "It has been suggested that by reason of the policy having been drawn up on a printed form, the printed terms of which are applicable to a voyage and also to goods as well as to the ship, the policy is something less, or something more, than a time policy. But the practice of mercantile men of writing into their printed forms the particular terms by which they desire to describe and limit the risk intended to be insured against, without striking out the printed words which may be applicable to a larger or different contract, is too well known, and has been too constantly recognized in Courts of Law, to permit of any such conclusion."]

Incumbrance—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, ss. 59, 60, 66.*

The sale of a patni tenure for its own arrears under ss. 59 and 60, Beng. Act VIII of 1869, does not per se avoid the darpatni tenures, but only renders them voidable at the option of the purchaser.

An under-tenure is an incumbrance within the meaning of s. 66, Beng. Act VIII of 1869.

THIS case was referred to a Full Bench by McDONELL and FIELD, JJ., on the 29th of June 1882. The facts are as follows : The plaintiffs claimed rent as darpatnidars of a certain mehal. The patni mehal was sold for its own arrears in Pous 1285 (December 1878), and purchased by certain persons who were not made parties to this suit. The amounts claimed are arrears for the year 1285 (1878). The ryots objected to the suit on the ground that the patni mehal having been sold for its own arrears the darpatni rights had been extinguished, and that in consequence they were not liable to pay the rent to the plaintiffs for the [664] period subsequent to the sale. They also alleged that they had paid rent for that period to the new purchaser. The Judge of the lower Appellate Court held that the sale of Pous 1285 did not ipso facto avoid the darpatni; and he gave the plaintiffs a decree, there being no evidence to show that the purchasers of the patni had ever taken possession of the mehal. The following is the reference to the Full Bench :—

“The question raised in the case is, whether upon the sale of an under-tenure, under the provisions of ss. 59 and 60 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, a subordinate under-tenure is ipso facto avoided by the sale; or is not avoided until the purchaser by some overt act indicates his intention to exercise his power of avoidance. In the present case a darpatnidar sued the tenants immediately under him for rent; and they have set up as a defence that in consequence of the sale of the patni tenure for its arrears in 1285, the darpatni was ipso facto avoided, and the darpatnidar's rights came to an end :—

“The lower Appellate Court has held that the darpatni was not ipso facto avoided; that the effect of the sale was to make it avoidable only; and that there is nothing to show that the purchaser of the patni has exercised his option of avoidance.

“It is now contended before us, upon the authority of the cases of Unnoda Churn Dass Biswas v. Mathura Nath Dass Biswas (I. L. R. 4 Cal., 860; s.c. 4 C. L. R. 6), and Mohini Chunder Mozumdar v. Jotirmoy Ghose (4 C. L. R., 422), that this decision is wrong, and that the Subordinate Judge should have held that the effect of the sale was to avoid the darpatni, irrespective of any act of the purchaser. The question is one of some intricacy and the decisions of this Court are conflicting. A sale for arrears of revenue and a sale for arrears of rent have, on many occasions, been regarded as analogous; and in considering the consequences of a sale for arrears of rent, an argument has been drawn from the consequences of a sale for arrears of revenue. In the case of Ranee Surnomoyee v. Suteesh Chunder Roy (10 Moore's I. A., 123; s. c. 2 W. R., P. C., 14), their Lordships of the Privy Council say, [Here his Lordship quoted from 10 Moore's I. A., pp. 143 to 147: “Upon [685] the argument before their Lordships”——“According to usages and rate of the Parganas.”]

“The case just referred to was followed by the case of Khajah Assanoollah v. Obhoy Chunder Roy (13 Moore's I. A., 317), and this latter case is discussed in the case of Kuzee Munshie Aftabooldeen Mahomed v. Sanioolla (23 W. R., 245). Then comes the case of Raja Suttia Sarun Ghosal v. Mahesh Chandra Mitter (2 B. L. R., P. C., 30; 11 W. R., P. C., 10). In this case the principle laid down in the case of Ranee Surnomoyee was applied to a sale under the subsequent Regulation XI of 1822; and it was laid down that the option of avoidance was to be exercised within a reasonable time. The language of s. 30 of Regulation XI of 1822 was: “All tenures which may have originated with the defaulter or his predecessors, &c.....shall be liable to be avoided and annulled by the purchaser, &c.” To the same effect is the case of Tara Chand Dutt v. Mussanmut Wakenoonnissa Bibee (7 W. R., 91), which was also decided upon s. 30 of Regulation XI of 1822. In the case of Koylash Chunder Dutt v. Subur Ali (22 W. R., 29), the same principle was extended to sales under s. 37 of Act XI of 1859, and it was further held that the assignee of a purchaser may exercise the power of avoidance. The language of s. 37 of Act XI of 1859 is: “The purchaser.....shall acquire the estate free from all incumbrances which may have been imposed upon it after the time of settlement, and shall be entitled to avoid and annul all under-tenures and forthwith to eject all under-tenants with the following exceptions.” The same language “acquire it free of all incumbrances” is used in s. 66 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869.

"In the case of Madhusudan Kundu v. Ram Dhan Ganguli (3 B. L. R., A. C. 431; 12 W. R., 383), the same principle was extended to patni sales. MARKBY, J., referring to the decision upon the Revenue Sale Law, said: "It is true that these decisions turned upon words of the law not precisely similar to those of Regulation VIII of 1819, [686] s. 11, cl. 1, but it is clear to my mind that it would be impossible to put a construction upon that Regulation different from that put in those decisions on the Regulation of 1793, of 1822, and Beng. Act VI of 1862 which are all in pari materia; and I think it must now be taken as an established principle of law that no sales for arrears of rent have ipso facto the effect of cancelling tenures created by defaulting owners, but merely to give to the purchaser the power to do so if he thinks proper, which has not been done in this case." In the case of Gobind Chunder Bose v. Alimooddeen (11 W. R., 160) the same principle was applied to a sale under Beng. Act VIII of 1865. BAYLEY, J., there said: "The expression used by the first Court is not that it finds that the intervenor was so in receipt of such rents, but to the effect that, even if he were, the plaintiff's auction-purchase would over-ride every position that the intervenor might have under the law. In my opinion this is quite erroneous. Section 16, Beng. Act VIII of 1865 enacts 'that the purchaser of an under-tenure, sold under this Act, shall acquire it free of all incumbrances which may have accrued thereon by any act of any holder of the said under-tenure, his representatives or assignees, unless the making of such incumbrances shall have been expressly vested in the holder by the written engagement under which his under-tenure was created, or by the subsequent written authority of the person who created it, his representatives or assignees.' But it does not follow that without any act on the part of the auction-purchaser, or any notice of an intention to cancel a pre-existing miras tenure, an auction-purchaser might avoid any incumbrance. The real duty of the first Court, therefore, on Beckwith's intervention, was to fix an issue and take evidence and try whether, firstly, at the time of the auction-purchase, Beckwith, as dur-mirasdar of Kristo Jibun, was in actual receipt and enjoyment of the rents bona fide or not. This will include the question as to whether there was any notice given by the auction-purchaser of the cessation of Beckwith's dur-maurasi right, and of the auction-purchaser's intention to exercise his right with reference to the provisions of s. 16, Beng. Act VIII of 1865."

[687] "Now, up to this case, there seems to have been a consensus of decision that the same principle applied to sales for arrears of revenue and sales for arrears of rent. But then come the cases of Unnoda Churn Dass Biswas v. Mothura Nath Dass Biswas (I. L. R., 4 Cal. 860; s. c. 4 C. L. R., 6), and Mohini Chunder Mozumdar v. Jotirmoy Ghose (4 C. L. R., 422) in which a contrary view has been taken. In this conflict of decisions we refer the following questions to a Full Bench:—

(1) Has a sale under ss. 59 and 60 of Beng. Act VIII 1869 the effect of avoiding incumbrances irrespective of any act done by the purchaser in order to the exercise of the right of avoidance? (2) Is an under-tenure an incumbrance within the meaning of s. 66 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869? With reference to the last question, it is to be observed that while the patni regulation provides expressly for incumbrances and under-tenures, s. 66 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869 provides for incumbrances only."

Bahoo Nil Madhub Bose for the Appellants.

No one appeared for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Full Bench was delivered by

Garth, C. J.—In answer to the questions referred to us, I think that an under-tenure is clearly an incumbrance within the meaning of s. 66 of the Rent

Law of 1869, and I also think that, for the purposes of this case, the effect of a sale for arrears of revenue under Regulation VIII of 1819 is substantially the same as that of a sale for arrears of rent under s. 37 of the Rent Law. In either case the under-tenures are not ipso facto avoided by the sale, but are voidable only at the option of the purchasers.

In the case of Unnoda Churn Dass Biswas v. Mothura Nath Dass Biswas (I.L.R., 4 Cal., 860; s. c. 4 C.L.R. 6) the question which we have now to decide hardly considered. That case came up on appeal before my learned brothers and myself from a decision of Mr. Justice MARKBY and Mr. Justice PRINSEP, who had differed as to the time within which a purchaser under the Rent Law was bound to bring a suit to cancel an under-tenure.

[688] Mr. Justice MARKBY thought that the purchaser, in order to entitle himself to sue, must give some notice of his intention to cancel the under-tenure within a reasonable time after the sale. Mr. Justice PRINSEP was of opinion that the purchaser was not bound to give any notice; and that what was a reasonable time for cancelling the under tenure had been defined by Art. 120* of the Limitation Act of 1871.

In this I agreed with my brother PRINSEP, and all that we really decided in that case, so far as I am aware, was, that it is not necessary, for the purpose of avoiding an under-tenure or other incumbrance, that the purchaser should give any notice, or to do any act before bringing his suit; and that his suit must be brought within the time prescribed by the Limitation Act.

I fear, however, that my own judgment in that case was not as carefully worded as it ought to have been, and that it may have led to an impression, which appears to have been acted upon in subsequent cases, that we intended to lay down as law, that under s. 37 of the Rent Law incumbrances including under-tenures were absolutely avoided by the sale.

I consider the view of the learned Judges who referred this case to be quite correct, namely, that for the purpose of the question which we have to determine, the same principle applies to sales of arrears of rent as to sales for arrears of revenue, and that both are only voidable at the option of the purchaser.

The appeals, therefore, in all the cases depending upon our decision will be dismissed.

Appeals dismissed.

[689] SMALL CAUSE COURT REFERENCE.

The 9th March, 1883.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT. CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE WILSON.

H. Mackintosh

C. Crow and another.*

H. Mackintosh

G. C. Gore and another.

Interest—Promissory Note—Failure to pay on due date—Enhanced rate of interest—Penalty—Breach of contract.

Where money is borrowed under a contract for repayment with interest on a certain day, and the contract stipulates that if the money is not paid at the due date it shall thenceforth carry interest at an enhanced rate, such a stipulation is not a penalty, and the enhanced rate agreed to be paid may be recovered in its entirety.

Mackintosh v. Hunt (I.L.R., 2 Cal., 202) followed; Bansidar v. Bu Ali Khan (I.L.R., 3 All., 260) considered.

THIS was a reference in two cases heard by the Second Judge of the Calcutta Court of Small Causes. The material portions of the reference are as follows :—

This is a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover from the defendants Rs. 190 on a promissory note, dated 20th December 1877, which is in these terms :—

“On the 3rd March 1878, we jointly and severally as principals promise to pay Mr. H. Mackintosh, or order, the sum of Rs. 50 for value received allowing him a discount to due date out of it Rs. 10 as agreed upon previously. Should we neglect or fail to pay or delay payment of the amount beyond due date, it shall carry interest from due date to date of final payment at the rate of ten per cent. per mensem.”

The note is for Rs. 50, from which was deducted Rs. 10 as discount at the time the loan was given, so that Rs. 40 was all that the defendants received. They have already paid Rs. 110 towards interest, and the present claim is for Rs. 50 as principal and Rs. 140 as interest, making a total of Rs. 190. The amount of interest on a loan of Rs. 50 or more, properly speaking Rs. 40, which has already been paid and is still payable, [690] is Rs. 240, which is six times the actual amount of the loan : and the contention is that the amount of interest claimed after due date of the note is a penalty, and that as such the Court has a discretionary power to award a reasonable rate of interest, and that if the Court exercise this discretion, there would be found nothing due to the plaintiff. A further plea of fraud in the original contract has also been raised, of which no evidence has been given.

* Small Cause Court Reference No. 7 of 1882, from orders made by Baboo Koonjo Lall Bannerjee, Second Judge of the Presidency Small Cause Court, Calcutta, dated the 1st of July 1882.

These authorities, except Din Dayal Lall v. Hetnarain Singh and Cook v. Fowler, and some others, fully support the view contended for. The question whether the stipulation for payment of a higher defaulting rate of interest is a penalty or interest, has at times been viewed in different lights by the highest Courts in India. Mr. Justice HOLLOWAY, in Adanky Ramachandra Row v. Indukuri Appalaraju Garu (2 Mad. H. C., 351), in an exhaustive judgment has ruled that the higher rate is not a penalty, but liquidated damages. While in Motoji Bin Ratanji v. Shekh Husen (6 Bom. H. C., A. C., 8), and Pawa Nagaj v. Govind Ramji (10 Bom. H. C., 382), the Bombay High Court has held that the increased rate of interest is a penalty. Then again in Mackintosh v. Hunt (I.L.R., 2 Cal., 202) referred by the First Judge of this Court in a suit on a promissory note, which was worded exactly as the present instrument is, and in which the question whether the higher rate of interest was a penalty or interest was directly put by the learned Judge, the High Court (His Lordship the present Chief Justice and Mr. Justice MACPHERSON) decided that it was not a penalty but interest. But in another case Bichook Nath Panulay v. Ram Lochan Singh (11 B.L.R., 135), Mr. Justice PONTIFEX has held that a stipulation to pay the higher rate of interest on a default being made in payment of a smaller rate is a penalty. This view has been clearly shown to be quite in accordance with the principle laid down by TINDAL, C.J., in the well-known case of Kemble v. Farren (6 Bing. 141), which, I believe, first laid down the rule that when a larger sum at once became due on failure to make payment of a smaller sum, the former is a penalty.

[691] Mackintosh v. Hunt was decided on the 18th July 1877, or nearly five years ago. Since then the Judges of the Allahabad High Court, in four successive cases, have held that the higher rate of interest payable in default of the payment of the principal with the lower rate of interest is a penalty, and they accordingly reduced the rate. Those cases are Chuhar Mal v. Mir (I. L. R., 2 All., 715); Kazhar Ali Khan v. Sardar Mal (I. L. R., 2 All., 769); Bansidhar v. Bu Ali Khan (I. L. R., 3 All., 260); Khurram Singh v. Bhawani Baksh (I. L. R., 3 All., 440); and Kharag Singh v. Bhola Nath (I. L. R., 4 All., 8).

In the other case the promissory note runs as follows :—

"We jointly and severally as principals promise to pay Mr. H. Mackintosh, or order, in Calcutta the sum of rupees one hundred in the following manner, for value received allowing him a discount to the due date of the instalments out of it as agreed upon previously.

"The instalments to be paid thus :—

On the 12th July 1880	...	Rs. 10 0 0
On the 12th August 1880	...	" 10 0 0
On the 12th September 1880	...	" 10 0 0
On the 12th October 1880	...	" 10 0 0
On the 12th November 1880	...	" 10 0 0
On the 12th December 1880	...	" 10 0 0
On the 12th January 1881	...	" 10 0 0
On the 12th February 1881	...	" 10 0 0
On the 12th March 1881	...	" 10 0 0
On the 12th April 1881	...	" 10 0 0

"Should we neglect or fail to pay or delay payment of any instalment beyond due date it shall carry interest from due date to date of final payment at the rate of (10) ten per cent. per mensem."

The amount claimed is Rs. 275, of which Rs. 100 is principal and 175 interest. The same objections have been raised in this case as in the other case, and treating the condition to pay a higher rate of interest as a penalty. I have directed a verdict to be entered for the plaintiff for Rs. 117-8; allowing interest at twelve per cent. per annum from the date of the note. Both these judgments are contingent upon the opinion of the High Court.

The question I respectfully submit is whether, under the circumstances of these cases and the facts found and the authorities quoted, I am right in treating the stipulation to pay the defaulting rate of interest at a higher rate as a penalty, and in decreeing interest at a reasonable rate.

No one appeared to argue the reference.

The Opinion of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and WILSON, J.) was delivered by

[692] Wilson, J.—Two rules of law are established by the Legislature of this country :—

First.—That a man is free to contract to pay any rate of interest that he chooses upon money borrowed; and the Courts must enforce it against him, Act XXVIII of 1855, s. 2*, and there is nothing to hinder his agreeing with regard to the future as well as the present. He may contract to pay no interest at present, but interest hereafter; or to pay one rate of interest now, and a higher or lower rate hereafter.

Secondly.—By s. 74 of the Contract Act, "when a contract has been broken, if a sum is named in the contract as the amount to be paid in case of such breach, the party complaining of such breach is entitled, whether or not actual damage is proved to have been caused thereby, to receive from the party, who has broken the contract, reasonable compensation not exceeding the amount so named." This section, it will be observed, does away with the distinction between a penalty and liquidated damages and this must be borne in mind in dealing with cases decided before the Contract Act, many of which turned upon this distinction. Under this section, whether a sum would formerly have been held a penalty or liquidated damages, if it be named in the contract as the amount to be paid in case of breach, it is to be treated, much as a penalty was before, as the maximum limit of damages.

The contracts now before us are two, which are substantially similar in their terms. It is sufficient to set out one. (His Lordship read the note set out at page 689 ante.)

The question is, whether this note not having been paid at the due date, the plaintiff can recover interest at the rate stipulated for after due date. And to answer this question we must say under which of the two rules of law referred to this contract falls.

* [Sec. 2 :—In any suit in which interest is recoverable, the amount shall be adjudged or decreed by the Court at the rate (if any) agreed upon by the parties; and if no rate shall have been agreed upon, at such rate as the Court shall deem reasonable.]

What rate of interest shall be decreed by the Court in any suit.

Of course, the use of the word interest does not conclude the case. The substance of the transaction must be looked to; and many cases have occurred in which what has been called interest has been held to be a penalty under the old law, or to fall under s. 74 of the new.

[693] Thus in many cases the provision has been, that in case of default in payment on the due date, an increased rate of interest shall be payable from the date of the contract. Such a provision was formerly a penalty, and is now within s. 74. This was the case in Rasaji bin Davlaji v. Sayana bin Sagdu (6 Bom. H. C. A. C. 7); Mazhar Ali Khan v. Sardr Mal (I. L. R., 2 All., 769); and in a recent case before FIELD, J., and myself, Muthura Persad Singh v. Lauggun Koor (ante, p. 615).

In another class of cases the contract has been one of loan for a term certain, with a provision that, if default be made in payment of interest, or of an instalment of principal, the whole shall bear an increased rate of interest. This was the nature of the contract in Motoji bin Ratnaji v. Shekh Husen (6 Bom. H. C. A. C. 8), and in a recent case before MACLEAN, J., and myself, R. A. No. 99 of 1881.

In Bichook Nath Panday v. Ram Lochun Singh (11 B. L. R., 135) and in Khurram Singh v. Bhawan Baksh (I. L. R., 3 All., 440) both these circumstances appear. In Pava Nagaji v. Govind Ramji (10 Bom. H. C., 382), the terms of the contract do not clearly appear from the report. But in the judgment it is said that the case of Motoji bin Ratnaji v. Shekh Husen (6 Bom. H. C. A. C. 8) was precisely in point. At any rate the case was not decided under the section with which we have now to deal.

In all such cases this element is present, that by the terms of the contract a sum is made payable by reason of the breach, capable of calculation at the time of the breach, and payable in all events, though in the second class of cases the payment is spread over a term.

But where, as here, the contract is merely, that if the money is not paid at the due date, it shall thenceforth carry interest at an enhanced rate, I do not see how it can be said that there is any sum named as to be paid in case of breach. No one can say at the time of the breach what the sum will be. It depends entirely on the time for which the borrower finds it convenient to retain the use of the money. It is a fresh sum becoming due [694] month by month, or as the case may be, for a new consideration. And, in my opinion, the case falls under the first rule of law above mentioned, not under the second. This view of the law was acted upon by this Court in Mackintosh v. Hunt (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 202).

A case is referred to by the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court, which may seem to conflict with this view. Bansidhar v. Bu Ali Khan was decided by a Full Bench of the Allahabad Court. The facts of the case were very peculiar. The document in question was dated the 9th November; it acknowledged a loan of Rs. 50, to be repaid in four days, on the 13th November, and added "in the event of default he shall pay interest at the rate of Re. 1 per diem." The Court held that this last provision was a penalty. STUART, C. J., says that he regards it as a penalty, and STRAIGHT, J., delivering the judgment of the rest of the Court, explains the view somewhat more fully, saying that, looking at the entire instrument, the parties intended, when they spoke of interest, a penalty for each day's default in payment of the principal sum. If I rightly apprehend the principle of that decision it is based on the view that the provision as to interest was intended not to regulate the terms on which the loan was to continue, but to prevent the continuance of the loan, by imposing a penalty of Re. 1 for the first default and treating each day's further delay as a new default, for which a new penalty should be payable. So regarded, the decision is not inconsistent with the view which I take of this case.

I would answer the question referred to us in the negative.

Garth, C.J.—I agree.

[695] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 19th June, 1883.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Shyam Chand Koondoo.....Defendant

The Land Mortgage Bank of India, Limited.....Plaintiff.*

Sale in execution of decree—Right to sue for damages—Mesne profits—Civil Procedure Code (1877), s. 266, cl. (e).

The right to sue for mesne profits is a "right to sue for damages" within the meaning of s. 266, Cl. (e) of the Code of Civil Procedure, and therefore cannot be sold in execution of decree.

Where, therefore, the plaintiff purchased the right to sue for mesne profits at a sale in execution of a decree, Held that a suit by him to enforce the right was not maintainable.

Baboo Grija Sunkur Mozoomdar for the Appellant.

Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose for the Respondent.

THE facts are sufficiently stated in the Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and FIELD, J.), which was delivered by Field, J.—The Land Mortgage Bank of India is the plaintiff. The facts of the case are apparently somewhat complicated, but when they are understood, they really present no difficulty. The defendant No. 1, Shyam Chand Koondoo, was the 8-annas proprietor of a patni taluk, lot Buradakundi, and as the result of certain litigation, to which I shall presently refer, the defendant No. 2, Durga Churn Shaha, was the proprietor of the other moiety of the same patni.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1830 of 1881, against the decree of F. W. V. Peterson, Esq., Judge of Jessore, dated the 15th June 1881, modifying the decree of Baboo Kedareswar Roy, Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 27th September 1880.

Durga Churn Shaha, on the 8th of March 1872, mortgaged his 8-annas share to the Bank. The mortgage debt not having been discharged, the Bank took steps upon the mortgage bond, and having obtained a decree was about to bring the 8-annas share belonging to Durga Churn Shaha to sale, when one Shoshi Bhoosan Shaha came in and preferred a claim, alleging a title in himself to [696] half of Durga Churn Shaha's moiety, that is, a 4-annas share of the entire patni.

This claim was at the time successful, and in consequence the Bank, abstaining from the further execution of their decree, brought a suit to have a declaration of Durga Churn Shaha's title to the entire moiety of the patni.

This suit was ultimately successful; meanwhile, however, the defendant No. 1, Shyam Chand Koondoo, executed a decree against Shoshi Bhoosan Shaha, the successful objector; and having brought to sale the disputed 4-annas share of the patni taluk, himself purchased it on the 7th of June 1876.

The Bank being successful in the suit brought by it to have a declaration of Durga Churn Shaha's title to the disputed 4-annas share, was about to execute its original decree, but the patni was now allowed to fall into arrears of rent, and was in consequence brought to sale under the provisions of Regulation VIII of 1819.

This sale realized a gross sum of Rs. 26,600: deducting from this Rs. 5,019-13-3, being the amount of rent due to the zamindar, and Rs. 266-1-3, the amount of auction fees to which the Government was entitled, there remained a balance of Rs. 21,314-1-6, being the surplus sale proceeds. Of this amount, Shyam Chand Koondoo took from the Collectorate one moiety, which represented the 8-annas share of the patni, which, without dispute, belonged to him. The other moiety has been taken by the Bank, in consequence of their having successfully made out a title to Durga Churn Shaha's moiety.

The present suit has been brought to recover, first, mesne profits for the period during which Shoshi Bhoosan Shaha and the defendant No. 1, who subsequently purchased his interest, were in wrongful possession of the disputed 4-annas share, and also a sum of Rs. 1,254, which represents the rent due for the disputed 4-annas share during the period of arrear, in consequence of which arrear the summary sale took place under the Regulation.

The Bank bases its claim to the recovery of mesne profits upon the allegation that in execution of a decree the Bank purchased the right of Durga Churn Shaha, the defendant No. 2, to recover [697] damages for the period of the wrongful possession of Shoshi Bhoosan Shaha and Shyam Chand Koondoo.

Upon the hearing of this appeal, it appeared to us that the cause of action thus alleged will not entitle the Bank to recover.

Under the provisions of s. 266 of the Code of Civil Procedure, certain property therein specified may be sold in execution of a decree for money. The proviso to that section excepts certain items, and, amongst those items, we find in clause (e), "mere rights to sue for damages."

Now there can be no doubt that mesne profits are damages; and this being so, it appears to us that Durga Churn Shaha's right to sue for these damages could not have been sold in execution, and that therefore the plaintiff, having purchased that right, has taken nothing upon which he can base a cause of action capable of being maintained in a Court of Justice.

Then as to the sum of Rs. 1,254 for rent, we think that this sum also represents the profits of the property appropriated by the person in wrongful possession. No doubt the sum ought to have been paid as rent ; and inasmuch as it was not paid as rent, and so never reached the hands of the zamindar, we think that the plaintiff cannot, by giving the defendant credit in that portion of his claim which is concerned with mesne profits, alter the character of this particular item of claim.

It has been contended before us that this particular sum ought to be regarded as representing the disputed 4-annas share of the property. No doubt, when property to which a person has successfully set up a title is sold otherwise than by private sale, pending his litigation, and surplus sale proceeds remain in the hands of the Civil Court, those surplus sale proceeds are properly regarded as representing the immoveable property; but it appears to us that the present case does not fall within this principle. The sum of Rs. 1,254 never did, in the hands of the Collector, represent surplus sale proceeds, because the zamindar was entitled to take this amount out of the gross sum of Rs. 26,600 realized, and this amount is not included in, and does not constitute any portion of the remainder, Rs. 21,314-1-6, which alone, in the hands of the Collector, can be regarded as surplus sale proceeds.

[698] Such are the facts of the case ; but it appears to us that, although the plaintiff may have misconceived the cause of action, the equity of the case is on his side, and under these circumstances we will allow the appeal to stand over until Monday next, with a view to consider any application that may be made to us for the amendment of the plaint. We reserve the question of costs.

Subsequently the following order was made :—

The respondent is allowed to amend the plaint as prayed. The case will be sent back to the Court of First Instance to be tried de novo on the plaint so amended, upon the plaintiffs paying to the defendant the costs incurred by him in all the Courts on the amount claimed, less the sum in respect of which the amendment is allowed.

The costs in regard to the sum as to which the amendment is allowed will abide the result of the trial hereby directed.

Case remanded.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE NORRIS.

Lutchmeeput Singh.....Plaintiff

Sadaulla Nushyo and others.....Defendants.*

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 26—Dispossession—Fishery—Custom—Suit to restrain fishing in certain Bhils.

In a suit to restrain the defendants from fishing in certain bhils, which admittedly belonged to the plaintiff's zamindari, it appeared that the plaintiff had let out some of the bhils to ijaradars who had sued the defendants for the price of fish taken by them from the bhils, and that the suit had been dismissed, on the ground that the defendants, in common with other inhabitants of the villages in the zamindari, had acquired a prescriptive right to fish in the bhils. The defendants contended that they had been in possession of the bhils for more than 12 years, and that they had a prescriptive right to fish therein, under a custom according to which all the inhabitants of the zamindari had the right of fishing.

Held, that the mere fact that the defendants had trespassed and had misappropriated fish did not amount to a dispossession of the plaintiff, and that the suit was not barred by limitation.

Held, also, that no prescriptive right of fishery had been acquired under s. 26 of the Limitation Act,† and that the custom alleged could not, on the ground that it was unreasonable, be treated as valid.

Lord Rivers v. Adams (L. R. 3 Ex. D., 361) followed.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 2156 of 1880, against the decree of J. R. Hallett, Esq., Officiating Judge of Rungpore, dated the 25th June 1880, affirming the decree of Baboo Bhugwan Chunder Chuckerbutty, Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 20th March 1880.

† [Sec. 26 :—Where the access and use of light or air to and for any building have been peaceably enjoyed therewith, as an easement, and as of right without interruption, and for twenty years, and where any way or water-course, or the use of any water or any other easement (whether affirmative or negative) has been peaceably and openly enjoyed by any person claiming title thereto as an easement and as of right without interruption, and for twenty years, the right to such access and the use of light or air, way, water-course, use of water, or other easement, shall be absolute and indefeasible.

Each of the said periods of twenty years shall be taken to be a period ending within two years next before the institution of the suit wherein the claim to which such period relates is contested.

Explanation :—Nothing is an interruption within the meaning of this section, unless where there is an actual discontinuance of the possession or enjoyment by reason of an obstruction by the act of some person other than the claimant, and unless such obstruction is submitted to or acquiesced in for one year after the claimant has notice thereof and of the person making or authorizing the same to be made.]

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (MITTER and NORRIS, JJ.) which was delivered by Mitter, J.—The plaintiff is the patnidar of Pergunnah Batasone. The defendants Nos. 1 to 9 are the inhabitants of Roopsi, the defendants Nos. 10 and 11 are the inhabitants of Joroollahpore, and the defendants Nos. 12 and 13 are the inhabitants of Manipore. The villages of Roopsi, Joroollahpore and Manipore appertain to the zamindari of Pergunnah Batasone.

The plaintiff brought this suit praying for an injunction against the defendants to restrain them from fishing in certain bhils set out in the schedule to the plaint, and for a declaration that they had no right of fishing in the aforesaid bhils.

The grounds of action stated in the plaint are, that the bhils in question appertain to the zamindari of Pergunnah Batasone, of which the plaintiff is the patnidar; that the plaintiff is in possession of the fishery right in the said bhils; that out of these bhils, bhils Kendra and others, named in the second paragraph of the plaint, were let out in ijara to Kholie Mahomed and Deve Nushyo for three years, from 1283 to 1285 (1876 to 1878); that during the term of this ijara lease the defendants, in the months of Falgoon and Cheyt 1283 (February and March 1877), without the permission of the ijaradars, having caught and taken away fish from these bhils, the said ijaradars brought a suit for damages against them; that in that suit it was held by the Courts that the defendants, in common with the inhabitants of the villages mentioned above, had a prescriptive right to catch fish in these bhils, [700] using for the purpose certain specified fish traps; that the defendants are still continuing to fish in these bhils in the manner stated above; that they have no right of fishing in these bhils, the julkur right in which is owned and held by the plaintiff.

The prayers mentioned above were based upon these allegations.

The defendants in their written statement stated that the plaintiff did not possess any julkur right in these bhils; that neither he nor his predecessor in title ever held the possession of julkur right in them; that the defendants and other tenants of Pergunnah Batasone and the tenants of Pergunnahs Koondi and others had been in possession of the aforesaid julkur right under an adverse title for more than twelve years; that the tenants of these pergunnahs had exercised their right of fishing in these bhils from time immemorial for generation after generation.

Upon these allegations the lower Courts substantially raised the following issues: (1st), Is the suit barred by limitation; (2nd), Has the plaintiff any right in the disputed julkur; (3rd), Have the defendants in common with the tenantry of pergunnahs Batasone, Koondi, etc., any right to fish in the disputed julkur; (4th), Whether the defendants, in common with the tenantry of Batasone, Koondi, and other pergunnahs have any prescriptive right to fish in these bhils.

The lower Courts have dismissed the plaintiff's suit. It is clear from the judgments that the plaintiff is the owner of the disputed bhils. This fact was admitted. The lower Courts, however, have laid some stress upon the fact which they find, viz., that the plaintiff does not pay the revenue of these bhils; but the fact that these bhils appertain to his zamindari being admitted, it seems to us incomprehensible how the lower Courts could come to the conclusion that no revenue was being paid for these bhils. The Sub-Judge refers to a Punchsona paper in support of this finding. We have referred to that paper, and it is clear to us that it does not afford any ground whatsoever for the conclusion based upon it. We must, therefore, decide this case, taking it as an admitted fact that the plaintiff is the owner of these bhils. The second issue may be, therefore, dismissed from our consideration.

[701] The lower Courts, it seems to us, have dismissed this suit upon the first and the fourth issues. The Sub-Judge based his decision simply upon the plea of limitation; but the lower Appellate Court, while concurring with the decision of the Sub-Judge on the question of limitation, has based his judgment also upon the ground of the defendants having established their right of fishing by prescription.

We are of opinion that the decisions of the lower Courts upon both these questions are erroneous. In order to determine whether the plaintiff's claim is barred by limitation or not, we must see what the finding of the lower Court upon this point is. The Sub-Judge says:—

“They (the defendants) have examined six witnesses, almost all of whom are aged between 50, 60, and 70 years, and prove beyond doubt that the defendants, including the people of the neighbourhood, have been fishing in the bhils from their infancy, their knowledge extending since they came to sense when they were seven or eight years old. It is also amply in evidence that there are shingadars in some of the villages adjacent to the bhils, who, by the sound of their instruments called shinga, would invite the people in the vicinity, who would then assemble together and join in a body to catch fish in the bhils, which the witnesses in this case have styled in the colloquial language the bowaet system of fishery.” In order to ascertain clearly what this finding really amounts to, we have referred to the witnesses upon whom the Sub-Judge relies. They, without any special reference to the defendants in this case, prove that the tenants of the pergunnahs mentioned above have been in the habit of fishing in these bhils in the manner stated in the passage cited above. This does not, in our opinion, amount to a dispossession of the plaintiff, the owner of the bhils. It cannot be said that the defendants, upon the facts stated above, are in wrongful possession of the bhils. Unless it can be shown that the acts of misappropriation of the fish were done by a person or defined number of persons, the acts of misappropriation, even if they have the effect of depriving the owner of a property wholly of its profits, would not constitute dispossession of the owner. Suppose from a field belonging to A, B and C [702] carry away the crops raised by him in one particular year, D and E in the next year, and so on for any number of years—these acts can be only looked upon as mere trespasses, giving to A a right of action for damages against the successive trespassers, but in the eye of the law, the possession of A is not discontinued, because, it cannot be said that any ascertained persons, viz., B and C or D and E, are in wrongful possession of the property in question at any given time. You cannot say that an owner is out of possession unless you can say that a third party is in wrongful possession.

Moreover, supposing that such a fluctuating body, as the tenants of certain pergunnahs, can be said to be in wrongful possession of a property, still, until it is shewn that the owner is excluded from the participation of the enjoyment of it, he cannot be said to be out of possession.

For these reasons we are of opinion that the facts deposed to by the witnesses, upon whom the lower Courts rely, amount only to successive acts of trespass, and do not amount to a complete ouster of the plaintiff.

A question similar to this was raised in Parbutty Nath Roy Chowdhry v. Mudho Paroe (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 276); but in that case the defendants were ascertained persons who, under a claim of right, continuously exercised the right of taking fish from a bhil; and it was held that they were in possession for more than twelve years of an interest in land. Accordingly the claim of the plaintiff, who was the owner of the bhil, to restrain the defendants from exercising that right, was held to be barred by limitation. It is obvious that the distinction between that case and the present is,—that in the former some ascertained persons were proved to have been in adverse possession for more than twelve years of an interest in an immoveable property; in the present case, it has been already shown that no defined and ascertained persons have been in continuous possession of the fishery right in these bhils. The plaintiff's claim is, therefore, not barred by limitation.

The next question is, whether the defendants have established a prescriptive right to this fishery right. The learned pleader for the respondents upon this point has relied upon s. 26 of the [703] present Limitation Act. That section requires that any easement which is claimed (a right of fishery has been held now to be an easement under the present Limitation Act)—see Chundee Churn Roy v. Shib Chunder Mundul (I. L. R. 5 Cal., 945; 6 C. L. R., 269) must be shewn to have been peaceably and openly enjoyed by any person claiming title thereto, etc., etc. For the reasons given above, it cannot be said that in this case that right was exercised by any person or persons. The section evidently requires that the same person or persons must be shewn to have exercised that right for a particular length of time. Then, again, from the length of user (a fact found by the lower Courts in favour of the defendants), it cannot be presumed that there was a grant by the Sovereign Power. It seems to us that the presumption of a grant is impossible; because in this case it cannot be shewn that there was some ascertained grantee or grantees. The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the tenants of the several pergunnahs, in whose favour the right in question is claimed, must be considered to constitute a unit,—that is to say, he considers that they form a corporate body. We fail to see any tangible ground for this assumption. For instance, it may be that such a grant may be presumed in favour of a village community if such community be shewn to possess all the essentials of a corporate body; but we do not see any reason suggested by any evidence on the record which can support the conclusion that the tenants of the different pergunnahs, in whose favour the right in question is claimed, form anything like a corporate body. This point in the defence must, therefore, also fail.

This disposes of the grounds upon which the lower Courts' decisions are based. There remains to consider whether the right, set up by the defendants, can have for its basis a valid existing custom. It seems to us that it is unnecessary to enquire whether such a custom as the one set up by the defendants, has been established by the evidence. Because, supposing that it has been established, in our opinion, it cannot be treated as a valid custom on the ground of its unreasonableness. According to the custom set up, there is no limitation to the number of persons entitled to enjoy it. The tenantry may increase to any number, so that [704] according to this custom, an unlimited number of persons can take away the profits of a private property, and that nothing may be left to the owner. If the defendants are entitled to exercise the right of fishery in the way stated by them, they may take away the whole of the fish stocked in the bhils, leaving nothing for the plaintiff, who is admittedly the owner of them. Such a custom as this does not seem to be reasonable. We are, therefore, of opinion that it ought to be rejected as invalid.

Upon these questions of custom and prescriptive right, there is the case of Lord Rivers v. Adams (L. R. 3 Ex. D., 361), which is exactly in point. It is true that we are not absolutely bound by the authority of this case, but if the grounds upon which the decision is based be founded upon natural justice, we would be fully justified in following it. On an examination of the reasons given by the Court in that case it will appear that they are not peculiar to any country or any particular state of society, but they are in conformity with the dictates of natural justice.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the decisions of the lower Courts are erroneous and should be reversed. We reverse them accordingly and decree the plaintiff's suit with costs in all the Courts.

Appeal allowed.

NOTES.

[CUSTOMARY RIGHT—REASONABLENESS—

"The criterion of 'reasonableness' by which the case of Lutchmeput Singh v. Sadaulla (9 Cal. 698) was decided, may have been a good one as regards the alleged right of an indefinite number of persons to fish in the bails of a private owner; but it cannot be extended as a matter of law to all customs; for, as shown in Hall v. Nottingham, a custom may be good though its exercise may have the effect of depriving the owner of the soil of the whole use and enjoyment of his property."—(1889) 23 Bom. 666 at 672—1 Bom. L. R. 170. In this case the right of burial was successfully established. Compare also the following observations of the Privy Council in (1903) 31 Cal. 503; 8 C.W.N. 425. "They averred that from time immemorial they and their predecessors had enjoyed the right of pasturage over the waste lands of the villages, to which they belonged, and, in some cases, over waste lands of adjoining villages. It appears to their Lordships that on proof of the fact of enjoyment from time immemorial there could be no difficulty in the way of the Court finding a legal origin for the right claimed. Unfortunately, however, both in the Munsiff's Court, and in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, the question was overlaid, and in some measure obscured, by copious references to English authorities, and by the application of principles or doctrines more or less refined, founded on legal conceptions not altogether in harmony with Eastern notions."

[On appeal from the High Court at Fort William in Bengal.]

Jurisdiction of Commissioners appointed under the Nawab Nazim's Debts' Act (XVII of 1873).

The Commissioners appointed under the Nawab Nazim's Debts Act XVII of 1873, * having ascertained and certified that a certain zamindari was nizamut property, (i.e., held by the Government for the purpose of upholding the dignity of the Nawab Nazim for the time being), the fact that [705] this property had, before the passing of the Act, been conveyed by the Nawab Nazim to his son, did not deprive the Commissioners of jurisdiction to deal with the question. The plain language of s. 12 of the Act is not controlled by any words in the preamble.

* An Act to provide for the liquidation of the debts of the Nawab Nazim and for his protection from legal process.

A suit brought by a claimant against the Government and the grantee to recover the property, without the Nawab Nazim having been joined as a party, could not proceed.

APPEAL from a decree of the High Court, dated 26th April 1880, affirming a decree of the Judge of the Murshedabad District, dated 29th May 1878.

The question raised on this appeal was whether the suit, out of which it had arisen, could proceed without the Nawab Nazim of Bengal having been made a party to it; and this, again, depended on whether the Commissioners appointed under the Nawab Nazim's Debts Act XVII of 1873 had had jurisdiction to certify a zamindari to be nizamat property.

The appellants were the daughters of one Mehdi Ali Khan, who died on the 4th of January 1865, and were entitled by Mahomedan law to seven-eighths of his estate. He was the half brother of Amirannissa Begum, a deceased widow of a former Nawab Nazim. This widow had in her lifetime purchased a zamindari in the Murshedabad District, named Pargana Gopinathpur, which she held, not in her own name, but in that of Mehdi Ali. On her death in 1858, a question arose as to whether the succession to her estate was to be governed by the Mahomedan law, in which case Mehdi Ali would have succeeded to it, or by a custom alleged by the Nawab Nazim to the effect that the latter was the heir of every "gaddinashin Begum," or wife of a Nawab Nazim, such as Amirannissa had been.

Mehdi Ali received maintenance from the Nawab Nazim, not taking the zamindari; and on the 24th February 1858, he and his wife executed a la-dawa-nama, or deed renouncing claim, receiving a grant by purwana from the Nawab to the effect that "His Highness should grant to Mehdi Ali Khan and his heirs from generation to generation, Rs. 600 per month, upon condition that he should always remain submissive to the Nawab and never depart from this arrangement. On the death of Mehdi Ali in 1865, an order was made, by the Magistrate having jurisdiction, [706] under s. 318^a of the Criminal Procedure Code then in force, placing Gopinathpur in the possession of the present appellants. Litigation followed, the Nawab Nazim obtaining a decree for the possession of Gopinathpur, on the ground that his was the better title, upheld on appeal both by the High Court at Calcutta and by order of Her Majesty in Council. According to the final judgment in that case given in 1875, their Lordships saw no reason to doubt that both Mehdi Ali and the Nawab at the time of the execution of the la-dawa-nama of 1858, and of the purwana, believed, bona fide, that the Nawab had a right to succeed to Amirannissa's estate; and that those two instruments amounted to a valid contract by which the Nawab Nazim and Mehdi Ali were respectively bound, and they maintained the title of the former to Gopinathpur. Meantime, and some years before this judgment was given in his favour, viz., on the 11th February 1869, the Nawab had made a gift of this zamindari to his second son Humayun Kader Mahomed

* [Sec. 318 :—When any person, under the age of sixteen years, is sentenced by any Criminal Court to imprisonment for any offence, such Court may direct that such offender, instead of being imprisoned in the Criminal Jail, shall be confined in any reformatory established by the Local Government as a fit place for confinement, in which there are means of suitable discipline and of training in some branch of useful industry, or which is kept by a person willing to obey such rules as the Government prescribes with regard to the discipline and training of persons confined therein.

All persons confined under this section shall be subject to the rules so prescribed by Government.]

Ali Mirza Bahadur, commonly called Amir Saheb, the second respondent in this appeal.

In 1870 the present appellants, alleging that the maintenance, Rs. 600 per month, had not been paid, sued the Nawab Nazim for recovery of the estate of Amirannissa, and also for arrears of the maintenance. They obtained a decree for the latter only to the amount of Rs. 50,000, confirmed by the High Court in 1872.

On the 24th November 1873 the Nawab Nazim's Debts' Act XVII of that year came into operation, and under it were appointed Commissioners having power to investigate claims against the estate of the Nawab Nazim, and to compel the attendance of witnesses for that purpose, with power to ascertain and certify what jewels and immoveable property were held by the Government of India for the purpose of upholding the dignity of the Nawab for the time being.

(Section 11 of Act XVII of 1873 enacts):—

"No suit shall be commenced or prosecuted, and no writ or process shall at any time be sued for against the person or property of the said Nawab Nazim, unless such suit be commenced, or such writ or process be sued for with the consent of the Governor-General in Council, first had and obtained.

"Such consent shall be certified by the signature of one of the Secretaries to the Government of India, and every such signature shall be judicially noticed.

"And any suit which at any time shall have been or shall be commenced, and any writ or process which at any time shall have been or shall be sued for against the person or property of the said Nawab Nazim, shall be of no effect unless and until the consent of the Governor-General in Council, certified in manner aforesaid, is obtained."

Section 12.—"The Commissioners shall ascertain what jewels and immoveable property are held by the Government of India for the purpose of upholding the dignity of the Nawab Nazim for the time being, and shall certify the particulars of such jewels and property: and their finding thereon shall be binding and conclusive on all persons whomsoever."

[707] The present appellants then preferred a claim before the Commissioners, appointed under the above Act, for Rs. 50,000, the amount of the decree which had been given in their favour, but this claim, with one for further maintenance, was rejected.

On the 10th May the Commissioners certified that all the properties of which the Nawab Nazim had taken possession as heir of Amirannissa Begum, including Gobinathpur, became an appanage of his office and state; that he could not convey them to any one else; and that they were held by the Government of India for the purpose of upholding the dignity of the Nawab.

The Government having refused leave to the present appellants to execute the decree of 1872 against the property of the Nawab Nazim, they brought this suit in 1877 in the District Court of Murshedabad. They claimed against the Government and Amir Saheb Rs. 60,969, the arrears of maintenance decreed, with further arrears up to date, asking in the alternative for a return of Gopinathpur, which had been charged (it was alleged) with the payment of the allowance. They alleged that it was bound in the hands of the person to whom it had passed, so that upon non-payment of the allowance, it was recoverable by the plaintiffs. The Nawab Nazim was not made a party to the suit. The defence made by the Government was, amongst other things, that "as the present Nawab Nazim has an interest in the property, the subject-matter of the present suit, the plaintiffs should have made him a party."

On the 4th October 1877 the Court decided an issue framed in regard to this defence that the Nawab Nazim ought to be made [708] a party. The Government being empowered by the Act of 1873 to withhold its consent to a suit being brought against him, refused, in February 1878, to grant the necessary permission.

On the 29th May 1878 the Judge of the Murshedabad District dismissed the suit, on the ground that the Nawab Nazim was not joined, and his decision was upheld by the High Court (JACKSON and TOTTENHAM, JJ.) on the 26th April 1880.

The Court said, in dismissing the appeal: "However the suit may be brought, it is clear that it is not one which ought to be allowed to proceed without the Nawab Nazim being a party to it. The Legislature has given the Governor-General in Council full discretion to allow or not to allow the Nawab Nazim to be made a party to such suits; and in this case the Governor-General has refused to grant such permission."

On this appeal,—

Mr. R. V. Doyne appeared for the Appellants.

Mr. Graham, Q. C., and Mr. J. D. Mayne for the Respondents.

For the appellants it was contended that the suit had been wrongly dismissed. The question whether the Nawab Nazim should have been made a party to the suit (the only question now raised on the record as it stood) had been incorrectly dealt with. If Gobinathpur had come to the Nawab by inheritance, as it had come, it was an estate which he had power to convey; and if he had done so, thereby parting with his entire interest in the property, he would not be a necessary party to the present suit. Reference was made to the preamble of Act XVII of 1873; and it was contended that the property having passed away from the Nawab Nazim before that enactment, the jurisdiction of the Commissioners under the Act did not attach; and that, although, if they had had jurisdiction, their report would have been conclusive, yet, for the above reason, the matter was beyond their powers.

Counsel for the Respondents were not called upon.

Their Lordship's Judgment was delivered by

Sir R. P. Collier.—This was an action brought by Omrao Begum and Zahuran Begum, daughters of the late Saiyud Mehdi [709] Ali Khan, against the Government of India and the second defendant, who is called for shortness Amir Saheb, for the recovery of certain arrears of an allowance, or, in lieu thereof, possession of certain immoveable property. There is also a claim that the allowance may be charged upon this property, and that if it be not paid, the property be sold for the purpose of payment.

The facts necessary to the decision of this case may be shortly stated. Mehdi Ali Khan was a half-brother of Amirannissa, who was the widow of the grand-uncle and predecessor of the present Nawab Nazim of Bengal. A certain estate of Gopinathpur had been purchased by her, benami, in the name of the Mehdi Ali, but really for herself. Upon her death the Nawab Nazim claimed, by a custom of the family, all her property. Mehdi Ali, the father of the plaintiffs, raised some question upon this subject, and made some claim to the property himself; but he withdrew his claim upon an agreement, which is to be found in a purwana, not before their Lordships, to the effect that he was to receive Rs. 600 per month, and in consideration thereof to forego any claim he might have, and not to molest the Nawab Nazim for the future. It seems that, notwithstanding the agreement, he took possession of the property, whereupon the Nawab Nazim was put to a suit which finally came before this Board, and in which this Board decided that he was entitled to recover possession of the property in dispute, mainly upon the strength of the agreement, which agreement prevented the defendant from disputing his title. In the Courts of India a suit was brought by the appellants against the Nawab Nazim, to recover, amongst other things, the arrears of the allowance granted to Mehdi Ali Khan; and a judgment for some Rs. 18,000 was obtained in December 1873, about a month after the passing of the Act called the Nawab Nazim's Debts' Act. on which the question in the present case turns.

The Government of India plead, among other things, that the suit could not proceed because the Nawab Nazim was not made a party to it. Whether they are right or wrong in that contention depends upon the construction of the Act which has been referred to—an Act to provide for the liquidation of the debts of the Nawab Nazim of Bengal, and for his protection against [710] legal process. The object of this Act was, as stated in the preamble, to put a stop to various suits, to ascertain what property, with respect to which there had been some disputes, was or was not held by the Government of India for the purpose of upholding the dignity of the Nawab Nazim, and for the purpose of exempting him for the future from being sued in the Courts. This Act appointed certain Commissioners for the purpose of determining what claims or debts were enforceable against the Nawab Nazim, and how much it was equitable to pay in respect of them, and gave them this jurisdiction without their being bound by any previous agreement or judicial proceeding; and then it proceeded, by s. 12, to enact thus: "The Commissioners shall ascertain what jewels and immoveable property are held by the Government of India for the purpose of upholding the dignity of the Nawab Nazim for the time being, and shall certify the particulars of such jewels and property; and their finding thereon shall be binding and conclusive on all persons whomsoever."

The contention on the part of the appellants has been that the Nawab Nazim having, as it is admitted, executed a conveyance of this property of Gopinathpur to the second defendant, his son, in the year 1859, it was not what may be called nizamat property, and that the Commissioners had no jurisdiction to deal with it, or to declare it to be nizamat property. But it has been very properly admitted on the part of Mr. Doyne that, if they had such jurisdiction, and if they rightly declared it to be nizamat property, then the suit cannot proceed.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the power of the Commissioners under s. 12 is by no means controlled, as it has been contended, by any words in the preamble, but must be construed according to the plain meaning of the language and that the language is, that the Commissioners are to ascertain "what jewels and immoveable property are held by the Government of India for the purpose of upholding the dignity of the Nawab Nazim." Whether this property had been conveyed to the son; whether the conveyance was valid; whether it was voluntary; whether it was collusive; or whether it was revocable—all these were questions which would come under the jurisdiction of the Commissioners to decide; and they have held that this property was immoveable [711] property held by the Government for the purpose of upholding the dignity of the Nawab. Their Lordships have no doubt that that was within the jurisdiction of the Commissioners; and if so, as has been very properly admitted, the suit cannot proceed, and the judgment of the High Court was right.

Under these circumstances their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm that judgment ; and this appeal will be dismissed with costs.
Appeal dismissed.

Mamtazul Huq and others.....Decree-holders

Nirbhai Singh.....Judgment-debtor.*

Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 58—Limitation—Landlord and tenant—Execution of decree—Instalments.

On the 10th of July 1878, a rent-decree was passed in favour of certain parties for the sum of Rs. 168, payable in two equal instalments, on the 4th of June 1879 and the 30th of October 1879, respectively. On the 18th July 1881, the decree-holders applied for execution of the decree.

Held, by the majority of the Full Bench (GARTH, C.J., and MITTER, J., dissenting) that the application was barred by limitation under the provisions of s. 58, Beng. Act VIII of 1869.

Gureebullah Sircar v. Mohun Lall Shaha (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 127 : S.C. 8 C. L. R., 409), dissented from.

THIS case was referred to a Full Bench by Mr. Justice MITTER and Mr. Justice MACLEAN, on the 22nd December 1882, with the following opinions :—

MITTER, J.—As at present advised I am inclined to follow the ruling in Gureebullah Sircar v. Mohun Lall Shaha (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 127 : S.C., 8 C. L. R., 409). As my [712] learned colleague is unable to take the same view, I would refer the question arising in this case to a Full Bench. The question I propose to refer is, whether the application for the execution of the decree, dated the 10th July 1878, is barred by the law of limitation.

As my learned colleague agrees to make this reference, the question stated above is accordingly submitted for the decision of a Full Bench.

* Full Bench Reference made by Mr. Justice Mitter and Mr. Justice Maclean, dated the 22nd December 1882, in appeal from Appellate Order No. 134 of 1882.

MACLEAN, J.—In my opinion the order of the District Judge should be affirmed. The question decided by him was, that the application made by the decree-holder, on the 18th July 1881, was a substantive application to execute the decree of the 10th July 1878, against the immoveable property of the debtor, and was therefore barred by the provisions of s. 58, Beng. Act VIII of 1869. The Munsif had decided that the application, which was made on the 18th July 1881, was in effect, a continuation of an application dated 11th March 1881. This was, in my opinion, entirely a mistake. The application of 11th March 1881 asked for realisation of the judgment-debt in one manner only, by arrest of the debtor. Process issued to that end, but was not successfully executed. The application was therefore exhausted.

The document of 18th July 1881 is in no sense an application made in the manner prescribed by law. It is a mere petition and should not have been acted upon. What the law requires is set out in s. 235 of the Civil Procedure Code, and no other application can be recognized. On this ground alone I would decide that the order, directing that execution should not issue, should stand; but as that point was not taken in either of the Courts below, and as I would affirm the order on other grounds, I proceed to state them.

It is admitted that the decree is for rent and for a sum below Rs. 500, and it is not disputed that it provided for payment of Rs. 168, in two equal instalments, on the 4th June and 30th October 1879. The contention here, which does not appear to have been made below, is that the special rule of s. 58 of the Rent Act is controlled by the provision of Art. 179 (6), Sch. II, Act XV of 1877, and it is argued that where a decree [713] for rent is passed in the terms of s. 210 of the Code of Civil Procedure, s. 58, Beng. Act VIII of 1869 is not to be applied.

It is certain that s. 6, Act XV of 1877, preserves any special law of limitation, and excludes the general law, and it seems to me that no Court ought to pass a decree which shall affect this provision. The provisions of s. 58, Beng. Act VIII of 1869 are identical with those of s. 92, Act X of 1859, and the latter Act was independent of the Code of Civil Procedure Act VIII of 1859. The provisions of s. 194 of the latter had, therefore, no operation in rent-suits under Act X of 1859. The Rent Law of 1869, s. 34, provides for the application of the Code of Civil Procedure to all suits and proceedings therein, save as in the Act provided. It may be said that section 210 of the Civil Procedure Code is not incompatible with the Rent Law. Granting this, I think, the rule of limitation for an application to execute a decree contained in s. 58 of the Rent Law, is applicable to a judgment passed under the provisions of s. 210 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and if the Court chooses to make a decree in the terms of that section for a sum below Rs. 500, it must do so with regard to the provisions of the Rent Law. In the case before us, the decree was passed by consent of both parties. The last instalment was payable on 30th October 1879, or 15 months 20 days after the date of the decree. The plaintiff must have known that he had 20 months 10 days within which to execute his decree with reference to s. 58, Act VIII of 1869. He waited 16 months 10 days before making any application whatever for execution. His first application of 11th March 1881 was infructuous, and he has made no application according to law since then; but conceding that the petition of 18th July 1881 was an application to execute, it could not be entertained with regard to s. 58, Beng. Act VIII of 1869.

I am unable to follow the ruling in Gureebullah Sircar v. Mohun Lal Shaha (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 127; 8 C. L. R., 409), which lays down that the words "from the date of such judgment" in s. 58, Beng. Act VIII of 1869, should be read as [714] if they were "from the date when the rent is adjudged to be payable." This decision seems to me contrary to the rulings quoted at the foot of page 131 (I. L. R., 7 Cal.,) and to the decision of the Judicial Committee in The Brenhilda v. British India Steam Navigation Co. (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 547 at p. 551). It seems to me to be more impolitic to pass a decree, the execution of which shall run contrary to the provisions of s. 58 of the Rent Law than to limit the power given to the Courts under s. 210 of the Civil Procedure Code. The Rent Law, Act X of 1859, was passed while the provisions of s. 194 of Act VIII of 1859 were in existence, and the Limitation Act of 1877, when the Rent Law of 1869 was in force. I see no reason for supposing that s. 6 of the Limitation Act was passed without regard to s. 58 of the Rent Law.

I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs; but I have no objection to the case being referred to other Judges of the Court or to a Full Bench. I concur in the terms of the question proposed by MITTER, J.

Moonshee Serajul Islam for the Appellants.

Baboo Joyesh Chunder Roy for the Respondent.

The following Judgments were delivered by the Full Bench:—

Prinsep, J.—I have had the advantage of seeing the judgments of my learned colleagues in this case, and I entirely concur in the opinion expressed by Mr. Justice WILSON. I would only add, as I have already stated in the case of Gureebullah v. Mohun Lall Shaha (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 127 : 8 C. L. R., 409), that if a reference to the Code of Civil Procedure is necessary to interpret the terms "date of judgment" used in s. 58, Beng. Act VIII of 1869, we find in s. 185 Act VIII of 1859, and also in s. 202, Act XIV of 1882, that the "judgment shall be dated by the Judge in open Court at the time of pronouncing it," and this is supplemented by s. 189 of the former Act and by s. 205 of the Code of 1882; both of which declare that "the decree shall bear date the day on which the judgment was passed." I also confirm the experience of Mr. Justice McDONELL, that until the decision of the case of Gureebullah [715] Sircar v. Mohun Lall Shaha (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 127 : 8 C. L. R., 409), this view of the law has always been accepted by our Courts ever since I have held judicial office.

Wilson, J.—I would answer the question referred to us in the affirmative.

Section 58 of the Rent Act VIII of 1869 is clear in its terms: "No process of execution of any description whatsoever shall be issued on a judgment in any suit for any of the causes of action mentioned in ss. 27, 28, 29 or 30 of this Act, after the lapse of three years from the date of such judgment unless the judgment be for a sum exceeding five hundred rupees."

I am unable to agree with the view expressed in Gureebullah Sircar v. Mohun Lall Shaha (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 127 : 8 C. L. R., 409), that the date of the judgment ought to be read as meaning the date at which the sum adjudged is made payable. The date of a decree or judgment and the date of payment under a decree or judgment are two distinct points of time, each of which has frequently been used as the starting point for limitation in the Limitation Acts. And the expression "date of decree," or order, or judgment, is used several times in this Act, as in ss. 53 and 103, and always, so far as I can see, in its ordinary sense.

I think the governing intention to be collected from s. 58 is that small decrees shall not in any event be kept hanging over judgment-debtors for more than three years; and I think that the express provision by which effect is given to that intention must override any provision of the Procedure Code introduced by the general terms of s. 34, even if the effect were to render the provision of the Procedure Code wholly inoperative. This, however, is not quite the case. No doubt, the limits within which a decree for payment by instalments can be made under the Procedure Code, are practically very much narrowed by s. 58 of the Rent Act, and within those limits, I have no doubt that such a decree ought not to be made except by consent, and then not without very great caution: but I suppose such a decree might in some cases properly be made, provided the effect of s. 58 of the Rent Act be always kept in view.

McDonell, J.—I think we are bound to construe s. 58 of [716] Beng. Act VIII of 1869 strictly, and to hold that the application for execution in the case referred to us is barred by limitation. I entirely agree with the opinion expressed now by my brother Judges (PRINSEP and WILSON) and also by Mr. Justice MACLEAN in the referring order. It seems to me that the intention of the framers of s. 58 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869 was to prevent any decree for rent when not exceeding Rs. 500 being kept pending over the heads of judgment-debtors for more than three years under any circumstances, and as far as my experience goes, it is only lately that any different construction has been put upon this section. In the view held by the majority, the appeal must therefore be dismissed with costs.

Mitter, J.—The decision of the question referred to us turns upon the true construction of s. 58 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869. It is clear that if we are to follow the construction which the language of the section strictly suggests quite apart from any other consideration, we must come to the conclusion that the application for execution in this case is barred by limitation. It is also unquestionable that we have no right to add to or subtract from the language of a legislative enactment, unless there are adequate grounds for the inference that the Legislature intended something which it has failed precisely to express.

It seems to me that there are adequate grounds for the inference, that the language of s. 58 does not precisely express the intention which the Legislature had in framing it.

Whether for gathering the intention of the Legislature or for construing the words used for expressing that intention, one of the cardinal rules of construction is, that all the parts of a legislative enactment should be read together.

Now s. 34 of the Act says: "Save as in this Act is otherwise provided, suits of every description brought for any cause of action arising under this Act, and all proceedings therein shall be regulated by the Code of Civil Procedure passed by the Governor-General in Council, being Act No. VIII of 1859, etc."

The effect of this section would be to incorporate the provisions of s. 194 of Act VIII of 1859 without any modification, unless the contrary were provided in any other part of the Act. Is the [717] contrary provided in any other part of the Act? This question must be answered in the negative, unless it can be said that it is so provided by implication by s. 58 itself.

It is clear that s. 58 does not contain any express provision upon this point; nor does it appear to me reasonable to infer from it that the Legislature intended that the provisions of s. 194 of Act VIII of 1859 should be incorporated in the former Act with some modification. It is evident that the provisions of the two sections would be repugnant to one another, if we are to put a literal construction upon s. 58. It would be preposterous to hold that in a suit for rent not exceeding Rs. 500, the Legislature under s. 194 conferred upon the Courts the power of ordering in the decree that the amount adjudged shall be paid by instalments, the first of which shall fall after three years from the date of the decree, and at the same time to put a strictly literal construction upon s. 58. Most incongruous consequences would arise from a construction of that nature, because the Legislature in that case would be saying in one and the same breath that a decree of the description mentioned above may be legally passed, but it would be impossible for the decree-holder, under any circumstances, to execute it.

Therefore, unless we can say that there are valid grounds for the inference that the Legislature did not intend to extend the provisions of s. 194 of Act VIII of 1859 at all to the classes of suits not exceeding Rs. 500, mentioned in the first part of s. 58 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, or to extend it with this modification, that the instalments shall range within three years, we must come to the conclusion that the language used in s. 58 fails to express precisely its real intention. I do not think that there are any adequate grounds for the inference that the Legislature intended that the defendants in the suits mentioned in s. 58 should not have the benefit under s. 194 of Act VIII of 1859 conferred upon impecunious debtors, or should have that benefit considerably curtailed. It must be borne in mind that, in the latter case, the time for executing the decree would be shortened by the time which elapses between its date and the dates of the respective instalments. I can [718] imagine no reasonable ground which would lead the Legislature to place the decree-holders in these cases in any disadvantageous position.

Furthermore, it seems to me that the necessity for the exercise of the discretionary power under s. 194 of Act VIII of 1859 would arise more frequently in suits for rent than in any other class of suits for money.

I come to the conclusion, therefore, that the language of s. 58 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869 fails to express precisely the intention of the Legislature which was to provide that, in the class of suits mentioned in the first part thereof, the execution must be sued out within three years from the date or the dates when the amount or the amounts decreed became payable.

In another respect also the Legislature in the language used in s. 58 has failed to express its true intention. It is quite evident that it intended in that section to provide for the limitation of the execution of decrees in all kinds of suits that may be instituted under the Act, because there is no other section upon the subject, and the s. 34 extended to suits of this description only, the Civil Procedure Code and not the law of limitation applicable to civil suits generally. It is also evident that the Legislature intended that there should be one rule of limitation in respect of suits of the value not exceeding Rs. 500, and another rule regarding the rest.

That being the intention of the Legislature, let us see how far the language used expresses it accurately. The section is to the following effect: "No process of execution of any description whatsoever shall be issued on a judgment in any suit for any of the causes of action mentioned in ss. 27, 28, 29, or 30 of this Act, after the lapse of three years from the date of such judgment, unless the judgment be for a sum exceeding Rs. 500, in which case the period within which execution may be had shall be regulated by the general rules in force in respect to the period allowed for the execution of decrees of the Court."

Now, in order to designate the class of suits in which the [719] value of the subject-matter exceeds Rs. 500, the Legislature uses the words "unless the judgment be for a sum exceeding Rs. 500." This description, if literally construed, would exclude suits for the possession of lands valued above Rs. 500. But there cannot be any doubt that the Legislature intended to include this class of suits in the last part of the section because there is no reason why simple money claims should have a longer period of limitation than claims for land. It would appear from the Acts relating to limitation of suits generally that the policy of the Legislature is just the contrary. Longer periods are generally allowed to suits for land than for money claims.

For the foregoing reasons, I am of opinion that the Legislature in the first part of s. 58 intended to provide for decrees under Rs. 500 other than those passed under s. 194 of Act VIII of 1859, or s. 210 (the corresponding section) of the present Civil Procedure Code, and that in the latter part it intended to lay down a rule of law applicable to the execution of all other classes of decrees. But it has failed to express this intention precisely by the language of the section. Under these circumstances, in order to give full effect to the intention of the Legislature, it is open to us to modify the language of the law. The cases bearing upon this subject, which are all collected in the 9th Chapter of a text-book on the interpretation of statutes by Maxwell, show to what extent it is allowable to modify the language of an Act, in order to carry out the intention of the Legislature.

In order to give effect to the intention of the Legislature with reference to s. 58, it would not, I think, be an unwarrantable modification of its language if we read it thus: "No process of execution of any description whatsoever shall be issued on a judgment in any suit for any of the causes of action mentioned in ss. 27, 28, 29 or 30 of this Act (not being a decree under s. 194 of Act VIII of 1859 or s. 210 of Act XIV of 1882), after the lapse of three years from the date of such judgment, unless the judgment be for a sum exceeding Rs. 500, in which case (and in all [720] other cases) the period within which execution may be had shall be regulated by the general rules in force in respect of the period allowed for the execution of decrees of the Court."

Having regard to the cases collected in the 9th Chapter of Maxwell on the interpretation of Statutes already referred to, it seems to me that the above modification of the language of s. 58 is not, as I have already said, unprecedented or unwarranted.

There are some Indian cases in which modifications of a similar nature in the language of a legislative enactment have been made by the Judges.

In Rhidooy Krishna Ghose v. Kailash Chundra Bose (4 B. L. R., F. B., 82: 13 W. R., F. B., 3) it was held, with reference to s. 92 of Act X of 1859, of which s. 58 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869 is a re-enactment, that the words "be issued" should be altered into "be sued out."

In Kangalee Churn Ghosal v. Bonomalee Mullick (B. L. R. Sup. Vol., 709) ss. 20 and 21 of Act XIV of 1859, were almost reconstructed; but in Bai Udekuvar v. Mulji Naran (3 Bom. H. C., A. C., 177), COUCH. C.J., was of opinion that the Judges in Kangalee Churn Ghosal's case had overstepped the limits allowed to the Judges to modify the language of an Act in the matter of construction.

The cases which bear the closest analogy to the present are Utaf Ali Khan v. Ram Lal (Agra H. C., F. B., 83); Gopala Setty v. Damodara Setty (4 Mad. H. C., 173); and Utam Ram Manik Ram v. Girdhar Lal Moti Ram (6 Bom. H. C., A. C., 45). In these cases the same question which is now before us was virtually raised. The language of s. 20 of the Limitation Act of 1859, like that of s. 58 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, did not fit in well with the provisions of s. 194 of Act VIII of 1859, and it was held in these cases that "when a decree awards payments by instalments to be made at particular specified dates, the date when each instalment becomes due is to be deemed the date of the decree in respect of that instalment for the purpose of calculating the time within which execution may be issued to enforce payment of it."

For these reasons I am of opinion that in this case the execution of the decree under our consideration is not barred by limitation.

Garth, C. J.—I regret that I am constrained to differ in this case from the majority of the Court; but I still think it right to adhere to the view which was taken by Mr. Justice MORRIS and myself in the case of Gureebullah Sircar v. Mohun Lall Shaha (I. L. R. 7 Cal., 127; 8 C. L. R., 409).

We all know that, as a general rule, the language of an Act should be strictly construed; and of course under ordinary circumstances the date of a judgment means the day on which the judgment is delivered.

The decision of the Privy Council, which is quoted in the reference, does no more than affirm this general rule, and there was no reason, apparently, in that case why the rule should not be followed.

But here, as explained by my brother MITTER, we have a provision in the Rent Law, which, if construed strictly, would conflict with, or at any rate render nugatory, an enactment in the Civil Procedure Code, in a very large class of cases, where that enactment is especially needed.

Under these circumstances I think we should do our best to reconcile, as far as we can, the two enactments, and to put such a construction upon the language of the one, as not to curtail the beneficial effects of the other.

In the result, therefore, I agree with my brother MITTER that the execution in the case is not barred by limitation.

[722] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 9th March, 1883.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE CUNNINGHAM AND MR. JUSTICE MACLEAN.

G. M. Reily.....Plaintiff

Hur Chunder Ghose and others.....Defendants.*

Sale for arrears of rent—Landlord and tenant—Sale of a portion of a Tenure—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, ss. 59, 60, 64—Co-sharers—Parties.

A portion of a tenure cannot be the subject of a sale under s. 64, Beng. Act VIII of 1869 so as to give the purchaser the same privilege as he would acquire by the purchase of an entire tenure under ss. 59 and 60.

A landlord who was in receipt of a half share of the rent of a certain tenure caused that share of the tenure to be sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent. After such sale A, the purchaser, took possession. Subsequently the tenant executed a mortgage, and a decree being obtained by the mortgagee the whole tenure was brought to sale in execution thereof and purchased by the mortgagee who proceeded to oust A.

In a suit by A to recover possession of his half share of the tenure on the footing of his purchase,

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2130 of 1881, against the decree of Baboo Upendro Chunder Mullick, Subordinate Judge of Jessore, dated the 5th August 1881, affirming the decree of Baboo Prosunno Coomar Ghose, Munsif of Magura, dated the 28th February 1881.

Held, that he could not make out a title to the half tenure with the privilege attaching to the purchase of an entire tenure under ss. 59 and 60 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, and that as it appeared that the mortgagor, whose rights and interests only were thus sold, was only one of several co-sharers, in the absence of the co-sharers who were not parties to the suit, A was not entitled to the relief he sought.

THE plaintiff in this suit alleged that Lal Khatoun, defendant No. 4, held a jama of Rs. 60-11 under Purno Chunder Roy, defendant No. 3, and one Bepin Chunder Roy, and that the rent thereof was separately paid to the maliks in two equal shares of Rs. 30-5-6 each; that in 1875 the defendant No. 3, in execution of a rent decree against the defendant No. 4, brought his share of the jama to sale, and it was purchased by the plaintiff on the 15th January of that year; that similarly the remaining eight-anna share of the jama was brought to sale by Bepin Chunder Roy, and was purchased by one Gouri Prosad Kundu, and that after their purchase both the plaintiff and Gouri Prosad were in possession [723] of their purchased shares by separately collecting rents from the sub-tenants of that tenure; that subsequently Hur Chunder Ghose and Ramdyal Ghose, defendants Nos. 1 and 2, in collusion with the defendant No. 4, made a false mortgage-bond against the latter, and defendant No. 1 obtained a decree thereon, and in execution of that decree fraudulently purchased the jama of Rs. 60-11, and dispossessed the plaintiff of his share. The plaintiff accordingly brought this suit to recover possession of his share upon the basis of his auction-purchase, and on the allegation that the purchase by the defendant No. 1 was a fraudulent one, and as such conferred no right on him.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 alone entered appearance and pleaded that the plaintiff having purchased only a share of his undivided tenure of Rs. 60-11, his purchase was illegal and conferred no right on him; that his allegation as to the possession and dispossession were totally false; and that the mortgage-decree and the auction-purchase of the defendant No. 1 were real and bona fide transactions; that defendant No. 1 alone was in possession of the tenure; and that as purchaser the plaintiff had no preferential right as against him.

The Court of First Instance found that the tenure of Rs. 60-11 was an undivided joint estate, and that it was never sub-divided into two jamas as alleged by the plaintiff, though the rent of it was paid separately to the maliks, and that there were several co-sharers in it besides Lal Khatoun. It therefore held that the plaintiff by his purchase of the jama of Rs. 30-5-6 purchased the rights of Lal Khatoun in the moiety of an undivided tenure, and that his purchase was illegal and created no rights in him. That Court also found that after the tenure was purchased by the plaintiff and Gouri Prosad, Ramdyal got up a false mortgage deed in collusion with the Khatouns, and subsequently got possession of the property under that deed by virtue of his purchase. The suit was accordingly dismissed. The lower Appellate Court confirmed that decree, agreeing with the finding of the lower Court that the plaintiff got nothing by his purchase; but it declined to express any opinion as to whether the mortgage transaction was a bona fide one or not.

The plaintiff preferred a special appeal to the High Court.

Baboo Bungsidhur Sen and Baboo Rash Behary Ghose for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (CUNNINGHAM and MACLEAN, JJ.) was delivered by Cunningham, J.—The main question in this case is, whether a portion of a tenure can be sold for arrears of rent under Beng. Act VIII of 1869.

Appellant's case is, that defendant No. 3, who was the landlord of defendant No. 4, and in receipt of a half share of the rent of a tenure rated at

Rs. 60-11, caused his share in the tenure to be sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent. Appellant became the purchaser, and he now claims possession on the ground that he purchased the property free of encumbrances, and that defendant No. 1 has fraudulently and collusively set up a false mortgage by defendant No. 4 and his co-sharers, and in execution of a decree obtained on the mortgage has bought the whole tenure, and ousted appellant from one-half.

Reference to the sale certificate shows that the sale, at which appellant purchased on 15th January 1875, was held under the provisions of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, and that a jama of Rs. 30-5-6 out of Rs. 60-11 was sold.

Both the lower Courts have held that appellant acquired nothing by the purchase, regard being had to s. 64 of the Act referred to. The first Court found that the title of defendant No. 1 was bad, as the mortgage he set up was a fraudulent one.

The lower Court expressed no opinion upon this question.

We think that the decision of the Courts below is correct, so far as it decides that a portion of a tenure cannot be the subject of a sale under s. 64, Beng. Act. VIII of 1869, and that appellant cannot make out a title to the half tenure with the privileges attaching to the purchase of an entire tenure under s. 59. It has been established by a number of decisions in this Court that a purchaser under s. 108, Act X of 1859, which corresponds to s. 64, Beng. Act VIII of 1869, acquires the judgment-debtor's rights and interests only.

[725] It appears, however, that the defendant No. 4, whose rights and interests were thus sold, was only one of several co-sharers, and we cannot decide in this case, and in the absence of his co-sharers, what that share was. There are, therefore, no sufficient grounds for saying that appellant has even purchased rights in the tenure to the extent of one-half, and it is therefore unnecessary to remand the case for a decision as to the validity of the first defendant's alleged mortgage and decree as against appellant.

Appeal dismissed.

We therefore dismiss the appeal with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 13th December, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MITTER, OFFG. CHIEF JUSTICE,
AND MR. JUSTICE NORRIS.

Jullessur Koorer.....Defendant

Uggur Roy and others.....Plaintiffs.*

Hindu Law—Inheritance—Mitakshara—Sister—Male gotraja sapindas—Stridhan.

According to the Mitakshara law a sister is not in the line of heirs, and is not entitled to succeed in preference to male gotraja sapindas. Nor does an estate inherited by a female become her stridhan. Such estate on her death goes to the heirs of the last male heir, and not to the heir of her separate property.

* Appeal from Original Decree No. 33 of 1881, against the decree of Baboo Kali Prosono Mukerjee, Subordinate Judge of Sarun, dated the 6th November 1880.

Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry and Baboo Gooru Dass Banerjee for the Appellant.

Baboo Kali Kissen Sen and Baboo Golap Chunder Sircar for the Respondents.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (MITTER and NORRIS, JJ.), which was delivered by Mitter, J.—This suit relates to the estate left by one Sheo Prosad Roy, who died in Assar 1270 (June 1863). It is admitted by the contending parties that on Sheo Prosad's death his estate devolved upon his widow, Sunder Kali Koor, under the Mitakshara law of inheritance which governs the family. Sunder Kali [726] died in 1271, (1864) and the estate then devolved upon Komla Koor, the mother of Sheo Prosad Roy. The dispute which led to the institution of this suit arose on the death of Komla Koor, which took place on the 26th Assin 1286 (11th October 1879). The plaintiffs are the male gotraja sapindas of Sheo Prosad, descended from his great-grandfather, and the defendant, who is in possession of the estate in question, is his sister. The plaintiff's contention is, that under the Mitakshara law the sister is not in the line of heirs at all. If this contention be correct then there cannot be any question that the decree of the lower Court in favour of the plaintiffs is correct.

It has been urged before us that a sister is a sapinda; and that as all sapindas inherit in order of propinquity, the defendant's claim is superior to that of the plaintiffs'. As to the question of propinquity it is unquestionable that the defendant is nearer of kin than the plaintiffs. Therefore the question for decision is whether under the Mitakshara law all sapindas (including females) are entitled to inherit. This question arose in the case of Ananda Bibee v. Nounit Lall (ante, p. 315).

For the reasons given at some length there, the conclusion to which I came was, that of the female sapindas only those that are specified by name are heirs according to the Inheritance Law as administered in Behar. It is unnecessary to repeat those reasons again here. I shall consider here the arguments which are peculiarly applicable to the case of a sister.

Then let us see how the question stands upon the Mitakshara itself. The heirship of the sister was sought to be established on the authority of that treatise of Hindu law in two ways: 1stly, it was contended upon an annotation of Balambhatta and Nanda Pundit that in para. 1, s. 4, chap. II, the word "brethren" includes brothers and sisters in the same manner in which "parents" have been explained to include father and mother in para. 2, s. 3, chap. II. With reference to this interpretation all the other commentators and writers of Nibandhus, who are followers of the Mitakshara, differ from this opinion. For example even Nilkantha, the author of Vyavaharmayakha, who [727] upholds the sister's heirship upon another ground, controverts this opinion. Moreover, if we are to adopt this interpretation as correct, we must give effect to it to its full logical consequences; we must then hold that the sisters and brothers would succeed simultaneously as joint heirs to the estate of a deceased brother; but such a conclusion as this would be contrary to a well established rule of Hindu law that has obtained in the province of Behar for a long series of years. The observations of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council made with reference to an argument based upon this contention may well be cited here: "Again," their Lordships observe, "were the arguments in favour of the construction which Mr. Piffard would put upon the Mitakshara far stronger than they really are, their Lordships would nevertheless have an insuperable objection, by a decision founded on a new construction of the words of that treatise, to run counter to that which appears to them to be the current of modern authority. To alter the law of succession as established by a uniform course of decisions, or even by the dicta of received treatises, by some novel interpretation of the vague and often conflicting texts of Hindu commentators would be most dangerous, inasmuch as it would unsettle existing titles"—Thakoorani Sahiba v. Mohun Lall (11 Moore's I. A., 306 at p. 403). The same contention was pressed in Mussamut Guman Kumari v. Srikant Neogi (2 Sev., 460), and the Court overruled it in the following words: "That recognition" (viz., the recognition of the sister as heir) "is due to the commentators (i.e., Balambhatta and Nanda Pundit)," and it is clear from the notes that all "other commentators were not of this opinion."

This contention must therefore fail.

The other argument in favour of the sister's succession is based upon the following passage of the Mitakshara: "If there be not even brother's sons, gotrajas share the estate," para. 1, s. 5, chap. II. Then in para. 3 it is laid down: "On failure of the paternal grand-mother, saman-gotraja sapindas, viz., the paternal grand-father and the rest inherit the estate." It has been contended that a sister is a gotraja-sapinda, and is therefore entitled to inherit under the text set forth above; but it is clear [728] from these two texts that the author of the Mitakshara intended to designate the same class of persons by the two expressions, viz., "gotraja-sapindas" and "saman gotraja-sapindas" used in paras. 1 and 3 respectively. Therefore the author of the Mitakshara used the word "gotraja-sapindas" not in the sense "of born in the same gotra," but in that of "belonging to the same gotra." A sister after marriage leaves the gotra of her father and consequently of her brother, and acquires that of her husband. Therefore a married sister does not come within the class designated by the expression "gotraja-sapindas" as used in the Mitakshara. This view of these passages of the Mitakshara is also taken by West and Bühler in their treatise on the Hindu law of inheritance and partition at page 180. They say: "The substitution of 'saman-gotraja' for 'gotraja' as well as the employment of 'bhinna-gotra' to designate the opposite of the term, both show that Vijnanesvara took 'gotraja' in the sense of 'belonging to the same family'. If the term has this meaning it would follow that no married daughters of ascendants, descendants or collaterals, can inherit under the text which prescribes the succession of the gotrajas. For the daughters by their marriage pass into another family or, as the Hindu lawyers say in their expressive language, are born again in the family of their husbands. But it seems improbable that even unmarried daughters of gotraja-sapindas can inherit under the text mentioned (a). For, though they belong to their father's gotra up to the time of marriage, they must leave it, under the Hindu law, before the age of puberty, and consequently by the succeeding to the estate of sapindas belonging to their fathers' families, the object of the law, in placing sagotra-sapindas before the bhinna-gotra-sapindas, viz., the protection of the family property, would be defeated, since such property, through them, would pass into their husbands' families. It seems therefore more in harmony with the principles on which the doctrines of the Mitakshara are based to exclude even unmarried daughters of gotrajas.

For these reasons it seems to me clear that the sister is not in the line of heirs according to the Mitakshara law.

The learned pleader for the appellant further relied upon a passage to be found in the Virmitrodaya at p. 216; but it has [729] nothing to do with the general question of the right of inheritance of the sister. The passage in question relates only to the subject of succession to reunited property. The author of Virmitrodaya, as already shown in the case referred to before, is of opinion that of the female sapindas only those that are specified by name are heirs. I am, therefore, of opinion that both these contentions are unsound.

It has been urged in the next place that, supposing the defendant is not entitled to succeed as the heiress of her brother, still there is not the slightest doubt that she is entitled to inherit to the stridhan left by her mother; that according to the Mitakshara law the estate of Sheo Prosad became the stridhan of his mother, because she acquired it by right of inheritance. It has been further urged that according to the Mitakshara law an estate acquired by a female, through the right of inheritance, becomes her stridhan. It is true that there is some foundation for this contention, but the question has been set at rest by the Privy Council decision in Chotay Lall v. Chunnoo Lall (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 744 : 3 C. L. R., 165). This decision is based upon a uniform current of decided cases, some of which are noted below : Keerut Singh v. Koolahul Singh (2 Moore's I. A., 331) ; Collector of Masulipatam v. Caraly Venkata Narain Apah (8 Moore's I. A., 529) ; Mussamut Thakoor Deyhee v. Rai Baluk Ram (11 Moore's I. A., 139) ; Bhugwandeem Doobey v. Myna Bae (11 Moore's I. A., 487) ; Mussamut Bijya Dibeh v. Mussamut Unnopoorna Dibeh (1 Sel. Rep., 162) ; Rughobur Suhace v. Tulashee Kowur (S. D. A., 1847, p. 87) ; Punchanund Ojhah v. Lalshan Misser (3 W. R. 140) ; Narsappa Lingappa v. Sakharam Krishna (6 Bom. II. C., A. C., 215) ; P. Bachiraju v. Venkatappadu (2 Mad. H. C., 402) ; Sengalamathammal v. Valayuda Mudali (3 Mad. H. C., 312) ; and Kattama Nachiar v. Dora Singa Tevar, (6 Mad., H. C., 310).

According to these cases an estate inherited by a female does not become her stridhan, and on her death goes to the heir of the last male heir and not to the heirs of her separate property. This appeal therefore fails on all points. We accordingly dismiss it with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE McDONELL AND MR. JUSTICE TOTTENHAM.

Torree Mahomed.....Judgment-debtor

Mahomed Mabood Bux and others.....Decree-holders.*

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 19, and Sch. II, Art. 179—Execution of decree, Application for—Acknowledgment in writing.

The mere payment of a court-fee in connection with execution proceedings, with a view to obtain leave to bid for property then up for sale in execution of a decree, does not constitute "the taking of some step in aid of execution" within the meaning of Art. 179, Sch. II of the Limitation Act (Act XV of 1877), so as to prevent the execution of the decree being barred within three years from the date of such payment.

An application for the execution of a decree is an application in respect of a "right" within the meaning of s. 19,† Act XV of 1877, and a petition made by a judgment-debtor, and signed by his vakeel, praying for additional time for payment of the amount of a decree constitutes an "acknowledgment of liability" within the meaning of that section, and a new period of limitation should be computed from the date of such petition in order to ascertain whether the execution of the decree is barred or not under the provisions of Art. 179, Sch. II of the Limitation Act.

Ramhit Rai v. Satgur Rai (I. L. R., 3 All. 247); and Ram Coomar Kur v. Jakur Ali (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 716) followed.

THE sole question in this case was, whether the execution of a decree, dated the 26th August 1878, was barred by limitation or not. The application for execution, out of which this appeal arose, was dated the 26th January 1882, and the judgment-debtor contended that it was barred by limitation, as having been made more than three years after any previous application to the Court to take some step in aid of execution of the decree within the meaning of Art. 179, Sch. II of the Limitation Act (Act XV of 1877).

The facts, as admitted by both sides, were as follows :—

The first application for execution was filed on the 7th November 1878, and on the 22nd February 1879, the decree-holders paid a fee of Rs. 2 into Court, in connection with those execution proceedings, with a view to obtain leave to bid for some property then up for sale.

* Appeal from Original Order, No. 321 of 1882 against the order of Colonel P. W. D. Morton, B. S. C., Subordinate Judge of Julpigoree, dated 29th August 1882.

†[Sec. 19:—If, before the expiration of the period prescribed for a suit or application in respect of any property or right, an acknowledgment of liability in respect of such property or right has been made in writing signed by the party against whom such property or right is claimed, or by some person through whom he derives title or liability, a new period of limitation, according to the nature of the original liability, shall be computed from the time when the acknowledgment was so signed.]

When the writing containing the acknowledgment is undated, oral evidence may be given of the time when it was signed; but oral evidence of its contents shall not be received.

Explanation 1.—For the purposes of this section an acknowledgment may be sufficient, though it omits to specify the exact nature of the property or right, or avers that the time for payment, delivery, performance or enjoyment has not yet come, or is accompanied by a refusal to pay, deliver, perform, or permit to enjoy, or is coupled with a claim to a set-off, or is addressed to a person other than the person entitled to the property or right.

Explanation 2.—In this section "signed" means signed either personally or by an agent duly authorized in this behalf.]

[731] In the lower Court the decree-holders relied on that proceeding as sufficient to withdraw the case from the operation of Art. 179 of the Limitation Act, and the Court adopted that view and disallowed the judgment-debtor's objection.

The latter accordingly appealed, and at the hearing of the appeal the decree-holders contended, in addition, that, inasmuch as a petition was filed by the judgment-debtor on the 21st February 1879, and signed by his vakeel, praying for additional time to be granted him in which to pay the amount of the decree, under s. 19 of the Limitation Act, a fresh period commenced to run from that date, and consequently that they were entitled to the order for execution asked for.

Moonshi Serajul Islam appeared on behalf of the Appellant.

Baboo Gooroo Dass Banerjee, for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (MCDONELL and TOTTENHAM, JJ.), was delivered by Tottenham, J.—The question for decision in this appeal is, whether an application made on the 26th of January 1882 for the execution of a decree, dated the 26th of August 1878, is barred by limitation. The judgment-debtor, appellant, contends that it is barred, as having been made more than three years after any previous application to the Court to take some step in aid of execution of the decree within the meaning of Art. 179 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act.

It appears that execution proceedings were going on in February 1879, and the decree-holders on the 22nd of that month paid a Court-fee of Rs. 2 into Court, in connection with those proceedings. The lower Court has held that this act of the decree-holders was practically such an application as comes within the meaning of Art. 179, and that thus the decree is saved from limitation.

We think that this opinion is not sustainable, for it seems to us clear that the decree-holders did not on that occasion ask the Court to take any step in aid of the execution. It is said that their object was to obtain leave to bid for some property then up [732] for sale, but such an application would not, in our opinion, give a fresh starting point. We are aware that very liberal constructions in favour of decree-holders have been put upon Art. 179 by other High Courts in India, but we cannot in this case adopt the interpretation of the Subordinate Judge.

Yet we think that we may upon other grounds support his decision that the decree is not barred. Last of all the several points laid before us by the respondent's vakeel was one which is supported by the authority both of law and precedent. Section 19 of the Limitation Act provides for a new period of limitation from the date of signing any written acknowledgment in respect of a right claimed against the party signing.

A Division Bench of this Court has held, in the case of Ram Coomar Kur v. Jakur Ali (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 716), that a petition made by a judgment-debtor, and signed by his vakeel, praying for additional time for payment of the amount of a decree, does constitute such an acknowledgment as is mentioned in s. 19; and that an application for execution of a decree is an application in respect of "a right" within the meaning of that section.

There is a decision of the Full Bench of the High Court of Allahabad to the same effect; see Ramhit Rai v. Satgur Rai (I. L. R., 3 All., 247). In the present case we find that there was a petition of this kind filed by the judgment-debtor on the 21st February 1879, and signed by his vakeel. Following the precedents above cited, we hold that the present application, made within three years of that one, is in time.

We accordingly dismiss the appeal, but under the circumstances we make no order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Service of summons—Service on Agent—Suit to obtain relief respecting immovable property—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 16, 77.

In a suit for foreclosure or sale of immovable property, it appeared that the mortgagor had conveyed the mortgaged premises to trustees. The summons to one of the trustees was personally served upon his duly constituted agent, who was at the time of service in charge of the mortgaged premises.

Held, that the service was sufficient, the suit being one to obtain "relief respecting immovable property" within the meaning of s. 16 of Act XIV of 1882.

Mr. Trevelyan for the Plaintiff.

THE facts of the case sufficiently appear from the Judgment.

Norris, J.—This is a mortgage suit. The plaint states that on 8th January 1881 the defendant No. 1 mortgaged certain premises to the plaintiff to secure the repayment of Rs. 12,000 with interest.

By an indenture of 21st January 1882 the defendant No. 1 conveyed the mortgaged premises, subject to the mortgage, to defendants Nos. 2 and 3 upon trust for certain charitable purposes.

The prayer of the plaint is "that an account may be taken of what is due to the plaintiff for principal and interest on the security of the said indenture of mortgage of 8th January 1881, and that in default of payment of the amount to be found due, and of the plaintiff's costs of this suit by a short day to be appointed by the Court in that behalf, the defendants may be absolutely foreclosed of all equity of redemption of and in the said mortgaged premises or otherwise that the same may be sold under the direction of this Honorable Court."

A question arises as to the sufficiency of the service of the summons on defendant No. 2.

It appears from the affidavits that prior to the institution of the suit the plaintiff was informed that defendant No. 2 was residing [734] at Bombay; that after the institution of the suit, on making further inquiries, he was informed that the defendant had left Bombay; that he was unable to find him or to ascertain his correct address, or to find any agent empowered to accept service of the summons; that on 5th January 1883 a copy writ of summons was personally served upon one Hadjee Mahomed Osman, the lawfully constituted agent of defendant No. 2, who at the time of such service was in charge of the mortgaged premises, and was collecting the rents thereof.

Mr. Trevelyan asked me to hold that this was good service under s. 77 of the Civil Procedure Code, arguing that this was "a suit to obtain relief respecting immovable property."

As I was informed that this was the first case in which service had purported to be effected under this section, I took time to consider the matter. As far as I know there is no definition in the Code or elsewhere of "a suit to obtain relief respecting immovable property"; but a reference to s. 16 of the Code seems to show that this suit is such an one. Section 16 says: "Subject to the pecuniary or other limitations prescribed by any other law, suits—

"(a) for the recovery of immovable property ;

"(b) for the partition of immovable property ;

"(c) for the foreclosure or redemption of a mortgage of immovable property ;

"(d) for the determination of any other right to or interest in immovable property ;

"(e) for compensation for wrong to immovable property ;

"(f) for the recovery of movable property actually under distraint or attachment ; shall be instituted in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property is situate."

Then follows a proviso where instead of referring to the suits which in the section are lettered a, b, c, and d, by such lettering or as the first four suits above-mentioned or recapitulating them again in full, they appeared to be described collectively "as suits to obtain relief respecting immovable property."

I am, therefore, of opinion that the service is good, and that the case may proceed.

Practice—Rule nisi to show cause why a person should not be made a party defendant—No grounds stated in or served with the rule—Rule granted during hearing of suit—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 32.

During the hearing of a suit for recovery of immovable property it appeared from the evidence and certain documents put in, that the plaintiff had mortgaged his right, title and interest to a third person, by whom the suit was practically being carried on. On an application by the defendant for the mortgagee to be added as a party defendant, under the provisions of s. 32 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Court directed a rule to issue calling on him to show cause why he should not be added as a party defendant or give security for costs. The rule was not applied for on petition or affidavit and set out no grounds for the application at all. On an objection taken by the mortgagee at the hearing of the rule

Held, that the grounds should have been stated on affidavit or have appeared on the face of the rule, and that the mortgagee was entitled to know what he had to answer, and consequently, the rule being informal, it was discharged with costs.

THE plaintiff instituted these suits, which were heard together, to recover possession of a certain properties held by the defendants. Prior to the institution of the suits the plaintiff mortgaged his right, title, and interest in the properties to one Russick Lall Mitter. Some of the defendants in their written statements alleged that the plaintiff was a man of no means, and that the suits were being carried on and maintained by Russick Lall Mitter, and that the plaintiff had executed an agreement and a mortgage of his right, title, and interest over the properties in suit, besides other property, in favour of the said Russick Lall Mitter. In the course of the cross-examination of the plaintiff by Mr. Palit, who appeared for Monee Bibee, the above facts were proved, and the two deeds were put in as exhibits in the suit. It also appeared, on the face of these documents, that Mr. H. H. Remfry, who was acting as attorney for the plaintiff in the suit, had acted as attorney for Russick Lall Mitter in the matter of the execution of those two documents.

[736] On these deeds being proved and put in, Mr. Pugh, who appeared for Gopal Doss Singh, applied, under s. 32 of the Civil Procedure Code, to have Russick Lall Mitter added as a party to the suit, and in support of his application cited Chunder Kant Mookerjee v. Ramcoomar Kundu (13 B. L. R., 530) ; and the same case on appeal to the Privy Council, Ramcoomar Kundu v. Chunder Kant Mookerjee (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 233), and contended that being a mortgagee he was a necessary party.

The Court thereupon granted a rule, calling on Russick Lall Mitter to show cause why he should not be made a party, or why he should not give security for costs; and directed that service of the rule on Mr. H. H. Remfry should be deemed to be good service on Russick Lall Mitter.

The following rule was accordingly issued and served:—

“This Cause coming on this day for final disposal before the Hon’ble JOHN FREEMAN NORRIS, one of the Judges of this Court, in the presence of Mr. Kennedy, Advocate for the plaintiff in the above mentioned suits, of Mr. Phillips, Advocate for the defendants Monee Bihee Sreemalinney and Woonnee Bibee, of Mr. Pugh, Advocate for the defendant Gopal Doss Singh, and of Mr. Sale for Mr. Hill, Advocate for the defendant Rakhal Dass; and upon the application of the Advocate for the said Gopal Doss Sing, it is ordered that Russick Kall Mitter, being served with the order, do, on Monday, the fifth day of February instant, show cause before this Court why he should not be added as party defendant to these suits, or why he should not give security for the costs of the defendants in the abovementioned suits: and it is further ordered that service of this order on Mr. H. H. Remfry, the Attorney for the said Russick Lall Mitter, be deemed good service on the said Russick Lall Mitter. Dated this second day of February in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three.”

On the 5th an application was made for the postponement of the hearing of the rule, on the grounds of the illness of Russick Lall Mitter and of his inability to instruct Counsel to show cause against the rule.

[737] The Court granted the postponement asked for, on the understanding that if the order nisi were made absolute it would take effect from that date. Pending the hearing of the rule, the suits had been dismissed with costs. Subsequently affidavits were filed by Russick Lall Mitter, and the rule came on for hearing on February 22nd.

Mr. T. A. Apear showed cause against the rule, and without referring to his affidavits contended that there was no ground for the rule, and nothing for him to answer. No grounds whatever were stated on the face of the rule, and it had not even been applied for on petition or affidavit, so that Russick Lall Mitter could not possibly be expected to know what he had to answer. As the proceeding was one in the same nature as that for contempt of Court, he submitted that he was absolutely entitled to have the materials upon which the rule was granted before him, and so be able to know what he had to answer before he could be called on to show cause. There was no rule contained in Belchambers’ Rules and Orders bearing on the question; and as this was an entirely novel proceeding he submitted the rule should be discharged with costs. In support of his contention he cited Archbold, Vol. II, p. 1257, and Tidd’s Practice, p. 479.

Mr. Pugh.—The application was merely one under s. 32 of the Civil Procedure Code, and, had he been in Court at the hearing, Russick Lall Mitter might have been added at once as a party defendant. [NORRIS, J.—Yes; if a substantive application was made, but then he would be cognizant of all that transpired, and I should always be inclined to hear what he had to say before adding him as a party.] I don’t wish to prejudice him now in any way, but the rule was granted in its present form not at my instance, but at that of the Court, for I merely asked the Court to proceed under s. 32, and not to call on him to show cause why he should not give security for costs. [NORRIS, J.—I think every one on whom a rule is served should, unless he is in Court when the matter is heard, be furnished with the grounds on affidavit, and I will postpone the hearing of this rule for that purpose.]

[738] Mr. Apcar.—The rule being informal can only be discharged with costs. [Mr. Pugh.—But Russick Lall Mitter has filed affidavits in reply.] Your Lordship can't look at anything further than the terms of the rule, and there being nothing for him to answer you cannot go into my affidavit.

Norris, J.—I think this rule must be discharged. It states no grounds whatever, and in granting the rule I did not intend that it should be drawn up as it has been. If it had been properly drawn up I should have been in a position to hear it, but as it stands now it must be discharged and under circumstances discharged with costs. I will grant liberty to apply, on affidavit, for a fresh rule, and I direct that the decree in the suit be not drawn up until the rule is disposed of as I shall give Mr. Pugh every facility for bringing this matter to a hearing.

Rule discharged with costs.

Attorney for the Plaintiff : Mr. H. H. Remfry.

Attorneys for the Defendants : Mr. E. J. Moses and Baboo Boley Chand Dutt.

Practice—Right of respondent, who has filed cross objections, to appeal, where appellant withdraws his appeal.

No leave to appeal should be granted to a respondent who has filed cross objections, unless the Court is thoroughly satisfied upon affidavit that he was ready to appeal, and would have appealed within the proper time if the other side had not done so.

THIS was an application to withdraw an appeal on payment of the respondents' costs; the respondents, who had filed cross objections, submitted that if the appellant's application were granted, they (the respondents) ought to be allowed to appeal.

[739] The Court ordered the respondents to file an affidavit on the question, as to whether or not they were ready to appeal, and would have appealed, in due time, if the appellant had not preferred his appeal first.

The contents of this affidavit, and the facts necessary for the purpose of this report, are fully set out in the judgment of the Court.

Mr. Evans and Baboo Grish Chunder Chowdhry for the Appellant.

Mr. Branson, Baboo Srinath Dass, Baboo Jogesh Chunder Roy, Baboo Kally Churn Mitter and Baboo Dwarkanath Banerjee for the Respondents.

* Appeal from Original Decree, No. 89 of 1881, against the decree of Baboo Nobin Chunder Ghose, Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 18th January 1881.

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C. J., and MACPHERSON, J.), was delivered by Garth, C.J.—This appeal being set down for hearing on the Peremptory Board, the appellant on Friday last applied to us by petition to withdraw the appeal.

Mr. Branson for the respondents objected, that if the appellant was allowed to withdraw his appeal, the respondents, who had filed cross objections, ought to be allowed to prefer a cross appeal.

As, however, it did not appear under what circumstances the cross objections had been filed, we gave Mr. Branson an opportunity of satisfying us, upon affidavit, that his clients were ready to appeal, and would have appealed in due time if the appellant had not preferred his appeal first.

The case accordingly came on again on Monday last, when Mr. Branson produced an affidavit made by the two plaintiffs (the respondents), from which it appeared that they had brought the suit to recover a moiety of certain mouzahs; that their claim had been decreed as to two of those mouzahs, but dismissed as to the rest; whereupon the defendant appealed to this Court as to the part of the claim which was decreed, and the respondents filed cross objections as to the part of the claim which was dismissed.

The affidavit then proceeded to say that, after the lower Court's judgment had been given, the plaintiffs applied for attested copies [740] of the judgment and decree with an intention to file an appeal in this Court against that part of the decree which dismissed their claim; and that these copies were obtained on the 11th of February 1881, so that the last day for filing their appeal would have been the 11th of May following.

Meanwhile, however, the defendant (appellant) had also obtained copies of the decree, and he appealed to this Court on the 28th of April 1881, so that the respondents, instead of appealing themselves, filed cross objections to his appeal.

But what the respondents' affidavit does not state, and what it is essential that it should state, in order to entitle them to file a cross appeal now, is this: that they were prepared to appeal on the 11th of May 1881, and would have appealed if the appellant had not done so.

The Judges of this Bench some time ago, after consulting other Judges of the Court, came to this conclusion: that no leave to appeal should be given to a respondent who has filed cross objections, unless the Court is thoroughly satisfied, upon affidavit, that he was ready to appeal, and would have appealed within the proper time if the other side had not done so.

We are by no means satisfied of this in the present case. The respondents were well aware that they were bound to satisfy the Court upon this point, they had ample time for considering the form of their affidavit; and yet it is perfectly consistent with the affidavit now before us; that they did not mean to appeal if the defendant had been content not to do so.

It is true that they might have taken copies of the decree with the intention of appealing; but it does not at all follow that, having obtained the copies and taken advice, they were prepared to appeal three months afterwards.

The counter-affidavit which has been made by the appellant's son distinctly states that, before this appeal was filed, the respondents proposed to the appellant not to file any appeal, and agreed not to do so, provided that the appellant did not.

Under these circumstances we think that we should be contravening the rule, which guides us in these cases, if we were to allow the respondents now to file an appeal.

[741] Mr. Branson has applied to us to be allowed to file further affidavits to remedy the defect in his present one; but this would be, for obvious reasons, a very dangerous thing to allow. The respondents must have known the point perfectly well upon which they had to satisfy us; and they had ample time to bring before the Court all their available materials.

We think, therefore, that the appellant should be allowed to withdraw his appeal, as he has proposed to do, on payment of costs; and that the respondents should not be allowed to file a cross appeal.

Appeal withdrawn.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 30th March, 1883.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE AND
MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON.

Ram Chunder Sao.....Plaintiff

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 83--Measurement chittas.

Chittas made by Government for its own private use are nothing more than documents prepared for the information of the Collector, and are not evidence against private persons for the purpose of proving that the lands described therein are or are not of a particular character or tenure.

THE plaintiff was the purchaser at a sale for arrears of rent under Regulation VIII of 1819, of a certain patni taluk called lot Hurirampur.

In 1878 the plaintiff sued defendant to recover possession of one higha 19 cottas of land as appertaining to that taluk, on the ground that he (the defendant) held the land at a rental of Rs. 10. This suit was, however, dismissed, as the defendant denied the relationship of landlord and tenant.

The plaintiff thereupon brought the present suit for possession of this land, and also for a declaration that it belonged to mehal lot Hurirampur.

The defendant admitted the proprietary right of the plaintiff in the mehal, but pleaded that the suit was barred under s. 13, [742] Civil Procedure Code, and that the land did not form part of lot Hurirampur, but was the lakeraj land of one Domon, from whose vendee he, the defendant, obtained it by purchase.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1950 of 1881, against the decree of Baboo Radha Krishna Sen, Additional Subordinate Judge of Hugli, dated the 3rd August 1881, reversing the decree of Baboo Behari Lal Mullick, Munsif of Haripal, dated the 27th September 1880.

The Munsif found, relying on certain Government chittas, that lot Hurirampur had been measured and resumed by Government in 1844; that the land in dispute appertained to mahal lot Hurirampur, and was not the lakeraj land of Domon, from whose vendee the defendant alleged that he had purchased; that the judgment passed in the rent suit contained no adjudication on the issues raised in the present case, and therefore s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code did not apply: he therefore decreed the case in favour of the plaintiff.

The defendant appealed to the Additional Subordinate Judge of Hughli, who held that the plaintiff had not sufficiently proved that he or his predecessors had ever been in possession of the land, and that the Munsif was wrong in relying on the chittas of 1844, as under s. 83 of the Evidence Act their accuracy could not be presumed, and that in any case they could not be used as conclusive evidence of title against a third party: he further found that the disputed land was lakeraj, and therefore allowed the appeal.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Umbuca Churn Banerjee for the Appellant.

Baboo Srinath Dass for the Respondent.

The Judgments of the Court (GARTH, C. J. and MACPHERSON, J., were as follows:—

Garth, C. J. I am of opinion that the chitta of 1844, which has been treated by the Subordinate Judge as no evidence against the present defendant, was not evidence, and that he was perfectly right in the view which he took.

As I understand, this was a chitta prepared by the Deputy Collector, with a view to resumption proceedings being taken, and the way in which that chitta was sought to be used in this case by the plaintiff, was that in that chitta the 1 bigha and 19 cottas of land in suit which has been found by the Subordinate Judge to be lakeraj, was not entered as lakeraj, but as rent-paying land.

[743] I think that having regard to the object of the chitta, and to the way in which it was prepared, it cannot be made evidence under s. 83 of the Evidence Act.

The maps and plans, which are mentioned in that section, are, as it seems to me, maps and plans made by the Government for public purposes; I quite agree with the learned Judges, who decided the case of Jannajoy Mullick v. Dwarkanath Mytee (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 287) that a map or plan made by the Government for private purposes, or when the Government is acting otherwise than in a public capacity, is clearly not evidence.

Our attention has been directed to certain cases by the learned pleader for the appellant, in which Mr. Justice JACKSON and some other learned Judges appear to have considered that jamabandi papers and maps prepared by Government with reference to lands, which they were holding in their khas possession as proprietors, were evidence under this section of the Act.

But I confess I cannot accede to that view; and if it should become necessary, I would refer the question, whether such documents are admissible, to a Full Bench.

I think it would be extremely dangerous to admit evidence of this kind under the guise of public documents. Such papers are merely prepared by the Government as landlords for the purposes of their estate, and they appear to me to be no more evidence against the tenants of that estate than similar documents would be, prepared by any other landlord.

I consider the chitta in this case to be nothing more than a document prepared for the information and guidance of the Collector; and that it is not evidence against private persons for the purpose of proving that the land described in it was or was not of a particular character or tenure. If the resumption proceedings had been put in, and it had been shewn that the defendant's ancestors claimed the land as lakeraj and were defeated, I quite agree that the chitta, coupled with the resumption proceedings, would have been admissible to prove that the land was not rent-free.

[744] But I think that the chitta per se, not evidence in this suit; and that the Subordinate Judge was right in so dealing with it.

The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Macpherson, J. --I concur in dismissing the appeal. I think that the chitta, standing by itself, furnishes no proof that the particular land, which is the subject of this suit, was resumed by Government. If the plaintiff wished to prove the resumption of these lands, he ought to have filed the resumption proceeding itself.

Appeal dismissed.

MR. JUSTICE WILSON.

Possession Dispossession Adverse possession --Presumption --Onus

Probandi --Limitation-- Joint owners, Adverse possession between.

Under the former Limitation Act, the cause of action, and under the present law the event from which limitation is declared to run, must have occurred within the prescribed period, and it lies on the plaintiff to show this. Accordingly, where the suit is for possession, and the cause of action is dispossession, the plaintiff is bound to prove possession and dispossession within twelve years.

Possession is not necessarily the same thing as actual user.

When land has been shown to have been in a condition unfitting it for actual enjoyment in the usual modes, at such a time and under such circumstances, that that state naturally would, and probably did, continue till within twelve years before suit, it may properly be presumed that it did so continue, and that the previous possession continued also until the contrary is proved.

* Full Bench Reference made by Mr. Justice MITTER and Mr. Justice NORRIS, dated the 14th August 1882, in appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2378 of 1880.

Such a presumption is in no sense a conclusive one. Its bearing upon each particular case must depend upon the circumstances of that case.

Many acts which would be clearly adverse, and might amount to dispossession as between a stranger and the true owner of land, would, between joint owners, naturally bear a different construction.

[746] THIS case was referred to a Full Bench by Mr. Justice MITTER and Mr. Justice NORRIS, on the 14th August 1882, with the following opinion :—

“The facts of this case are briefly as follows :—At the time of the permanent settlement, Pergunnah Attea was divided into the following zamindaries, the torzi numbers of which are 10, 11, 12, 16, 5031, 5032, 5033, 5034, 5035, 5151, 5152 and 5153. The lands of these zamindaries were separate and distinct, with the exception of a large area of jungle land consisting of 491 mouzahs, which went by the name of Araipara. The dispute in this case relates to 50 khaddas of land alleged by the plaintiffs to lie within one of these mouzahs, viz., Kazlah. The plaintiffs in this case are the proprietors of some of the zamindaries mentioned above. They alleged that they were in possession of the disputed lands, by receipt of their share of the rent derivable from the sale of timber, etc., i.e., such rents as are recoverable from jungle lands. Then they further allege that gradually a portion of the disputed lands was reclaimed and ryots were settled upon it; but that the defendants, who are the owners of one of these zamindaries, viz., 5032, dispossessed them on the 12th April 1868. The defendants, alleging that the land in dispute was not in Kazlah, but in mouzah Narina Alukdia, exclusively appertaining to their zamindari No. 5032, and further alleging that they have been in possession of the disputed lands for more than twelve years, amongst other pleas, pleaded limitation as a bar to the plaintiffs' claim. The Court of First Instance dismissed the plaintiffs' suit on the plea of limitation as well as on the merits. On appeal, the District Judge is of opinion that the decision of the Court of First Instance, on the merits of the case, was not correct. He says that, if it had not been for the fact that the claim was barred by limitation, he would have deputed an Amin to hold a local investigation upon the question, whether the land in dispute appertains to Kazlah or to mouzah Narina Alukdia. On the plea of limitation, he finds that Kazlah was thaked in 1859 as the joint property of the proprietors of all these zamindaries and as in their joint possession; but that the plaintiffs have utterly failed to prove their possession of the land in dispute within twelve years. Upon these findings of fact, the [746] District Judge has dismissed the plaintiffs' claim as barred by limitation. (1)

(1) The following is that portion of the District Judge's judgment which bears on the question of limitation: “I will now come to the issue as to limitation. In suit No. 61 (for about two-thirds of the whole claim), the plaint was filed on the 24th August 1878, in suit No. 12 it was filed on the 27th May 1879, in suit No. 639 on the 6th August 1879. In all, the cause of action, namely, forcible, fraudulent, unjust, and illegal dispossession, is said to have accrued on the 12th April 1868, so that by the admission of the plaintiffs, the earliest suit is within one year and eight months of being barred by possession admittedly adverse, and the latest suit is within eight months and a few days of being so barred. As to a 'forcible' dispossession, which apparently alludes to some specific act, there is not a word of evidence tendered. It clearly rests with plaintiffs to prove that a possession, which they admit to have been continuously adverse for upwards of ten years before the bringing of the first suit, did, during the preceding one year and eight months, not exist at all, or did not exist in adverse form: they must prove that a state of things different from what they admit to have existed for so many successive years did, as [747] "It is now contended before us that, having regard to the nature of the land in dispute, which was jungly waste and uncultivated at the time of the defendants allege it, not exist at any time during the two previous years. On the inability of the plaintiffs to do this, I concur with the lower Court. I also concur with the lower Court in finding that defendants have not proved the lands in dispute to appertain to their separate zamindari.

"Plaintiffs are for the most part large and wealthy zamindars, by no means slow to assert their rights, yet they admit that they have unaccountably slumbered over these rights for upwards of ten years. Plaintiffs, mainly for the purpose of proving their possession (joint with defendants) prior to 1275 (1868), rely on an ijara kabuliat, which they have filed. This document the lower Court has discredited; but without looking to its genuineness, it is sufficient to say that it is dated 1271 (1864) and was for 1271, 1272, 1273, and 1274 (1864-1867); and that it, of itself, forms no evidence whatever that possession followed upon it, or continued into 1275 (1868). The plaintiffs also rely on some chalangas filed not in suit No. 61, the heaviest and most important one, but in suit No. 12 which was commenced many months afterwards. They purport to have been given by Ram Jiban Joypal, one of the ijaradars, and are for rent of 1271, 1272, 1273, and 1274 (1864-1867); but in his evidence this man states that his ijara only extended up to 1272 (1865), and that he never went to Kazlah after 1272. His subsequent answers to the contrary, when pressed by plaintiffs, appear to me deserving of no weight. Plaintiffs in suit No. 61 examined seven witnesses, and in No. 12 they examined three witnesses. These witnesses do not appear to know anything about Kazlah, a very small fraction of the whole group, although some of them assert that defendants, by settling ryots and clearing the lands, had dispossessed them.

"There can be no doubt that limitation in such a suit as this runs from the commencement of an adverse possession. The plaintiffs have distinctly alleged (and this position is admitted by their vakeel), that the exclusive actual possession of defendants has throughout its existence been of an adverse character. It is for them then to prove that this sort of possession only commenced within the twelve years prior to their suit. They allege that it commenced in the month of Bysak 1275 (April 1868). They have quite failed to prove that allegation.

"I find that the plaintiffs have failed to discharge the onus on them, and to prove even prima facie that the adverse possession of the defendants commenced within twelve years of any of these suits. There is no evidence that clearances and settlement of the ryots began only in 1275; they admittedly existed in 1275, and the evidence is to the effect that they existed before that. Moreover, the plaintiffs have set up a case of actual possession and enjoyment by the receipt of rents for jungle produce down to 1275. They therefore cannot, as they would wish to do, plead that this is a case in which possession must be taken to go with the right.

"Plaintiffs' vakeels have relied much on a ruling by MACPHERSON and MORRIS, JJ., Shurfunmissa Bibee Chowdrain v. Koylash Chunder Gangopadhyaya (25 W. R., 53), but that decision only defines the time at which possession by a co-sharer is to be held to become adverse. It does not in any way say that a co-sharer cannot possess adversely, or that adverse possession by a co-sharer for twelve years is not a complete bar.

"Had I not held that plaintiffs were barred by limitation, and that, therefore, the appeals must be dismissed, I should have held that they, as ijmali sharers, were entitled to the joint possession they claim; and that the defendants having in no way established that they had expended a single rupee on Thakbust measurement, the plaintiffs' claim should not be thrown out as barred by limitation, unless the defendants prove adverse possession for more than twelve years. If it were an admitted fact that the land in dispute is still unclaimed, we have no doubt that this contention would be right. But it is admitted that a portion of the land in dispute is now under culti-[748]vation. Having regard to this fact, the question raised before us, in our opinion, becomes one of peculiar difficulty, so far as the cultivated lands are concerned. The decision bearing upon this point—Narab Nazir Sidhee Ali Khan v. Womesh Chunder Mitter (2 W. R., 75); Boolee Singh v. Hurobuns Narain Singh (7 W. R., 212); *Lall Singh v. We therefore refer the following question to the decision of the Full Bench:—

“It being assumed by the lower Appellate Court, for the purpose of deciding the question of limitation, that the land in dispute at the time of the Thakbust was jungle and in the joint possession of all the zamindars of Pergunnah Attea, including the plaintiffs predecessors in title, and it being found that the plaintiffs have failed to prove their possession of the disputed land, which is partly jungle and partly under cultivation, within twelve years from the date of suit, whether the plaintiffs' claim is barred by limitation.”

[749] Mr. Evans, Baboo Srunath Das, Baboo Joyesh Chunder Roy, and Moonshi Serajul Islam for the Appellants.

Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose, Baboo Rash Behari Ghose, and Baboo Kaloda Kunker Roy for the Respondents.

The following Judgments were delivered:

The Judgment of MITTER, McDONELL, PRINSEP, and WILSON, JJ., was delivered by Wilson, J. In these suits the plaintiffs sought to have their rights declared to shares in 50 khadas of land, and to be put in possession of them jointly with the defendants. The defendants denied the plaintiffs' title and also pleaded limitation. The lower Appellate Court has decided in favour of the plaintiffs on the question of title, holding them entitled to be put into possession, but for limitation. It has, however, held that their claim is barred by limitation. The question before us is whether the rule of limitation has been correctly applied.

reclamations, are in no way, in equity, entitled to defeat that right of the plaintiffs and to hold exclusive possession of even the cleared portion of the lands in suit. I should also have held that there was no private arrangement proved, whereby the other sharers consented to allow the defendants to hold exclusive possession of the lands in suit.”

The facts found or admitted, so far as they are material for the present purpose, seem to be these: The plaintiffs and the defendants have a good title to the lands in question jointly. At the date of a Thakbust in 1859 they were in joint possession. The whole of the lands were then jungle, yielding, however, some kind of profit, which has been variously described.

At some time or times subsequent to that date, but more than ten years ago, a portion of the lands was brought under cultivation, and of the lands so reclaimed the defendants have been in possession from the time of their reclamation. It would appear that the amount reclaimed is some 10 or 12 khadas out of 50, though perhaps what the District Judge says on that point does not amount to an actual finding.

With regard to the law, the District Judge says: "It clearly rests with plaintiffs to prove that a possession, which they admit to have been continuously adverse for upwards of ten years before the bringing of the first suit, did, during the preceding one year and eight months, not exist at all, or did not exist in adverse form. They must prove that a state of things different from what they admit to have existed for so many successive [750] years did, as defendants allege it, not exist at any time during the two previous years." And again: "The plaintiffs have distinctly alleged (and this position is admitted by their vakool) that the exclusive actual possession of defendants has throughout its existence been of an adverse character. It is for them to prove that this sort of possession only commenced within the twelve years prior to their suits." And he concludes: "I find that the plaintiffs have failed to discharge the onus on them, and to prove even prima facie that the adverse possession of the defendants commenced within twelve years of any of these suits."

It appears to us that the application of the law of limitation to cases, such as the present, requires considerable care.

There is no doubt as to the general rule: That under the former Limitation Act the cause of action, and under the present law the event from which limitation is declared to run, must have occurred within the proscribed period, and that it lies on the plaintiff to show this. Accordingly, where the suit is for possession, and the cause of action is dispossession, it has more than once been held by the Privy Council that the plaintiff is bound to prove possession and dispossession within twelve years Maharajah Koovar Singh v. Nund Lal Singh (8 Moore's L. A., 199, at p. 220); Raja Saheb Perhlad Sein v. Budhu Singh (12 Moore's L. A., 275, 337; s.c. 2 B. L. R., P. C., 111); Beer Chunder Jobraj v. Deputy Collector of Bhulloah (13 W. R., P. C., 23).

We think further that as a general rule the plaintiff cannot, merely by proving possession, at any period prior to twelve years before suit, shift the onus to the defendant. In the case already cited, Maharajah Koovar Singh v. Nund Lal Singh (8 Moore's L. A., 199, at p. 220), the plaintiff had adduced evidence to show possession earlier than twelve years before suit; but the Privy Council treat it as immaterial, saying at page 220: "The lands in question may have been part of mouzah Gopalpur, and, as such, may have been enjoyed by his (the plaintiff's) ancestor, and yet he may have lost, by lapse of time, his right to recover them." To this extent we are unable to concur in the view indicated by the Chief Justice in Kally Churn Sahoo. The Secretary of State for India (1. L. R., 6 Cal., 725).

[751] But possession is not necessarily the same thing as actual user.

The nature of the possession to be looked for, and the evidence of its continuance, must depend upon the character and condition of the land in dispute. Land is often either permanently or temporarily incapable of actual enjoyment in any of the customary modes as by residence or tillage or receipts of a settled rent. It may be incapable of any beneficial use, as in the case of land covered with sand by an inundation; it may produce some profit, but trifling in amount, and only of occasional occurrence as is often the case with jungle land. In such cases it would be unreasonable to look for the same evidence of possession as in the case of a house or a cultivated field. All that can be required is that the plaintiff should show such acts of ownership as are natural under the existing condition of the land, and in such cases, when he has done this, his possession is presumed to continue as long as the state of the land remains unchanged, unless he is shown to have been dispossessed.

Lands again may by natural causes be placed wholly out of reach of their owners; as in the case of diluvion by a river. In such a case, if the plaintiff shows his possession down to the time of the diluvion, his possession is presumed to continue as long as the lands continue to be submerged. Kally Churn Sahoo v. Secretary of State for India (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 725); Mono Mohun Ghose v. Mothura Mohan Roy (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 225).

When lands which have been in such a condition as to be incapable of enjoyment in the ordinary modes are reclaimed and brought under cultivation, the change is in many instances gradual and difficult of observation while in progress. Diluviated land may take years to reform. Jungle land is often brought under cultivation furtively by squatters clearing a patch here and a patch there at irregular intervals of time. So that it may be a matter of extreme difficulty to prove as to any piece of land, the exact date at which its condition became altered. And as the plaintiff, who has complied with the conditions we have indicated, is in the absence of dispossession presumed to continue in possession as long as the state of the land remains [752] unchanged, it is essential to inquire on whom the burden of proof of the date of the change lies.

The true rule appears to us to be this: That where land has been shown to have been in a condition unfitting it for actual enjoyment in the usual modes at such a time, and under such circumstances that that state naturally would, and probably did, continue till within twelve years before suit, it may properly be presumed that it did so continue, and that the plaintiff's possession continued also, until the contrary is shown. The presumption seems to us to be reasonable in itself, and in accordance with the legal principles now embodied in s. 114 of the Evidence Act.

It remains to consider the case of Rudha Gobind Roy v. Inglis (7 C. L. R., 364) decided by the Privy Council. We do not understand that case as establishing the broad proposition contained in the head note, which would be in conflict with the earlier decisions of the same tribunal. The land in dispute in that case had formed part of the bed of a bhil or lake; the title to the bhil and its bed was found to be in the plaintiff, and he had been in possession so long as the land was covered with water. The bhil gradually dried up and the defendant occupied the land so formed. The date of the drying up of the land and of its occupation by the defendant were in controversy, but these things had certainly happened recently. Their Lordships, having disposed of the other questions which were raised, say: "The question remains, whether the disputed land had or had not been occupied by the defendant for twelve years before the suit was instituted, so as to give him a title against the plaintiff by the operation of the Statute of Limitation. On this question, undoubtedly the issue is on the defendant. The plaintiff has proved his title; the defendant must prove that the plaintiff has lost it by reason of his, the defendant's adverse possession. And immediately below it is said: "The Subordinate Judge does not appear to have had his attention directed to the very important question when the new land formed." The present case is in its facts closely [753] analogous to that case; and the view which we take of the law certainly accords with the decision of the Privy Council.

The presumption of which we have spoken is in no sense a conclusive one. Its bearing upon each particular case must depend upon the circumstances of the case; and it is always liable to be rebutted by evidence. But having regard to the time at which the whole land was jungle, and the comparatively small quantity which up to the time of suit seems to have been cleared, we think that it ought to be considered in this case together with all the evidence; and we remand the case to the lower Appellate Court in order that the question of limitation may thus be again considered.

We desire to abstain from saying anything that might seem to fetter the judgment of the learned Judge in dealing with the question upon the whole materials before him; but there are two matters which may have an important bearing upon the case, and to which we think it right to draw attention. In the first place the nature of the profit derived by the joint owners from the land as jungle should be considered. If it should be that they were in receipt of a settled rent, regularly paid like an agricultural rent, the presumption in question might have little, if any, bearing on the case; if the profit was of a different description, the result might be materially different. Secondly, in considering any transaction prior to the time from which the plaintiff admits the defendants possession to have been adverse, it should be borne in mind that the case is one between joint owners, and many acts which would be clearly adverse and might amount to dispossession as between a stranger and the true owner of land, would, between joint owners, naturally bear a different construction.

Garth, C.J.—I am sorry that I cannot concur entirely with the view which has been taken of the law by my learned brothers.

So far as the result of this particular case is concerned, and the order which my learned brothers have made in remanding it to the Court below, I am quite content to defer to their judgment. It may be, and I trust that in the generality of cases it will be, that the difference of opinion which exists between us may not [734] tend to much diversity of practice. But what I cannot regard as sound law, (although I shall of course dutifully accept it after this judgment as our rule of action), is the principle which has been laid down by the rest of the Court upon the subject of presumption.

We are agreed that under the old, as well as the present, law of limitation, the plaintiff is bound in cases of this nature to prove a possession and a dispossession within twelve years before suit; and we are also agreed, as I understand, that this proof need not always consist of evidence of acts of possession on the one hand, or of the act of dispossession on the other.

Thus it is admitted that in the case of jungle land, or of land covered by water, the Court may, and generally, should presume in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that a possession enjoyed by the plaintiff before the twelve years, has continued until within the 12 years; and in the same way, when the plaintiff has proved his possession within the twelve years, and the defendant has been afterwards found upon the land, the act of dispossession by the defendant may be properly inferred.

But what I do not understand, and what I confess I cannot bring myself to believe is, that there exists in this country an arbitrary rule of law, applicable to jungle land or to land covered by water, or in fact to land of any particular kind or character, which does not also apply, according as the circumstances of each case may render it necessary, to land of all kinds.

I know of no law in this country, whether statutory or otherwise, which lays down or justifies such an arbitrary rule; the Privy Council, so far as I am aware, have never suggested such a rule, and it seems to me that the true solution of the question is to be found in the well-known principle of law, which, so far as I know, prevails, and may be applied here as properly and beneficially as it is in England, that a seisin or possession of land, which is once proved to exist in a particular person, may be, and often should be, presumed to continue until the contrary is shewn.

This is only one branch of the still more general rule, which is laid down in s. 142* of the Evidence Act,—that a state of things once proved to exist is presumed to continue—(See Taylor on Evidence, s. 98 and s. 123, Edition of 1848). The [755] particular rule, as applied to seisin or possession of land, is thus shortly laid down by Mr. Best in his book on Evidence, page 505: "Where seisin of an estate has been shown, its continuance will be presumed."

Of course this is only a disputable presumption, and one which is entitled to more or less weight, according to the circumstances of each case; and it must be applied at all times with discretion and caution. Where land is actually used and occupied, and the occupier, whoever he may be, is well known in the neighbourhood, there is rarely any occasion to resort to presumption.

And where the Court has every reason to believe, that the plaintiff would have no difficulty in proving by direct evidence a possession, if it had been really enjoyed, it would naturally attach little or no weight to any rule of presumption. But if it is shewn on the other hand, even in the case of cultivated land or house property, that the plaintiff, who had formerly been in undisputed evidence, had died, or had left the country, or for other reasons was unable, or unlikely to be able, to produce actual evidence of possession, the presumption might then legitimately be resorted to, and entitled to more or less weight according to circumstances.

This I understand to be the view of Mr. Justice MELVILL in the case of Pandurang Govind v. Bal Krishna Hari (6 Bom., H. C. A. C., 125 at p. 128) in which, after affirming what we all admit to be the law, that the burthen of proof in cases of this kind is upon the plaintiff, that learned Judge says: "The burthen of proof being upon the plaintiff, what is he required to prove? Simply, that the cause of action accrued within the period of limitation made applicable to the suit. This is by no means equivalent to saying that a plaintiff in an action of ejectment must prove that he has been in possession within twelve years. He may not have been in possession within twelve years, and yet the cause of action may have accrued within that period. If a man buy a piece of open ground, he is not bound to enclose it or to build upon it, or formally to take possession of it; nor, if he do formally take possession of it, is he bound by subsequent acts to proclaim the continuance of his possession. So long as the land remains unoccupied, his rights are not interfered with, [756] and he is not called upon to assert them. He has no cause of action, and there is no person whom he could sue. His cause of action accrues when another person takes possession of the land, and not before. If he has omitted to take possession of the land himself, he may not be able to treat the intruder as a trespasser; but he can bring an action to eject him at any period within twelve years from the date of the intruder's occupation of the land." I do not understand these expressions to apply exclusively to waste land, or to land of any other special character; but to all cases where the production of direct evidence of possession is either difficult or impossible.

I observe that Mr. Justice MELVILL in a later case, Moro Desai v. Ramchandra Desai (I. L. R., 6 Bom., 508 at p. 510) seems to consider that the Privy Council in the case of Radha Gobind Roy v. Inglis, had proceeded upon a view of the law, which was inconsistent with some earlier decisions of that learned tribunal, and also with what had been the practice in the Indian Courts for many years.

I am sorry to say that I myself fell into a similar mistake, if it was a mistake, in the case of Kally Churn Sahoo v. The Secretary of State for India (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 725) which has been alluded to in the judgment of my learned brothers. I supposed, but on a closer examination of the cases I think I erroneously supposed, that there was some difficulty in reconciling their Lordships' view in Radha Gobind's case with that which they had laid down in the case of Maharajah Koowur Singh v. The Secretary of State for India (8 Moore's I. A., 199) and other cases alluded to by my brother WILSON.

I endeavoured in the case of Kally Churn Sahoo to explain this apparent inconsistency, but I think I was wrong, and for this reason: this last case, as I now believe, proceeded upon the well-known rule to which I have alluded, that a title and seisin when once established must be presumed to continue in those cases at any rate where there is no direct evidence of possession, and where such evidence is, from the nature of the case, either difficult or impossible to obtain. In Radha Gobind's [757] case the defendants, who apparently had first brought the bed of the bhil in question into cultivation, were presumably better able than the plaintiffs to prove when and how the cultivation had commenced; and the case, when one looks at the circumstances of it, was just one of those in which the legal presumption with which I have been dealing might be usefully and properly applied.

On the other hand, in the case of Maharajah Koowur Singh, we find that so far from evidence of possession not being forthcoming, a considerable body of evidence was adduced on both sides. No less than eight witnesses were examined on that subject for the plaintiff, and nine or ten for the defendant, and their Lordships, after considering that evidence and the balance of probabilities on either side, decided in favour of the defendant. It is obvious that this was not a case in which the sort of presumption, which I have described could properly or reasonably have been applied, and I may observe before leaving the consideration of that case that I do not read one part of their Lordships' judgment in the sense that has been attributed to it by my learned brothers—I allude to the sentence: "The lands in question may have been part of mouzah Gopalpur, and, as such, might have been enjoyed by his ancestor, and yet he may have lost by lapse of time his right to recover them." I do not understand this to mean, and upon looking at the context I think it clearly does not mean, that in the view of their Lordships the plaintiff's ancestor had ever in fact been in possession. They meant to say that even if he had been in possession, he might have lost, by lapse of time, his right to recover the property.

And I think also that the two other cases decided by the Privy Council, Rajah Sahib Perhad Sein v. Budhoo Singh, (12 Moore's I. A., 275: s.c., 2 B. L. R. P. C., 111), and Beer Chunder Jobraj v. Deputy Collector of Bhullooah (18 W. R., P. C., 25) must be looked at in the same light. In Both of those cases we find that evidence was called on both sides; and that their Lordships came to a distinct conclusion upon that evidence. There was no necessity, therefore, and no reason, so far as I can see, for acting upon the principle for which I am now contending.

[758] But in Railha Gobind's case there was reason for acting upon that principle, and it appears indeed to have been the first case, amongst all those to which our attention has been called during the argument, in which it became necessary for their Lordships to resort to that principle. It will be found that in the generality of cases of this kind, the parties as a rule can and do produce more or less direct evidence of possession, and when they do so, the Court naturally and properly acts upon that evidence without resorting to any principle of presumption.

For these reasons I hope, as I stated in the first instance, that the difference which exists in this case between my learned brothers and myself will prove to be one rather of principle than of practice.

NOTES.

[I. POINTS ON WHICH THIS CASE IS ERRONEOUS—

(1) The statement at p. 750 that mere proof of anterior possession is not sufficient—see the Notes to 9 Cal., 39.

(2) The statement at p. 751 that “if the plaintiff shows his possession down to the time of the deluvion, his possession is presumed to continue as long as the lands continue to be submerged, citing 6 Cal., 725. This is wrong, unless the plaintiff is also the owner; 6 Cal., 725 was overruled by the Privy Council in 29 Cal., 518, P. C.

II. EJECTMENT—PROOF OF TITLE AND POSSESSION -

In an ejectment suit, the plaintiff must establish not only his title but his possession within twelve years before suit—8 M. I. A. 199; 12 M. I. A., 337; 10 Cal., 374; 577 (580); 16 Cal., 473; 17 Cal., 137; 23 Mad., 10.

The possession will be prima facie presumed to accompany the title in the case of jungle lands, etc.—9 Cal., 744; 19 Cal., 660; 26 Cal., 114 (118); 27 Cal., 25; (1901) P. R., 105 and when the evidence as to possession is conflicting, the title will prevail :—20 W. R. 25; 12 Cal. 38; 19 Cal. 661 (666); 27 Cal. 25; 8 C. W. N. 876; but this will not apply when the evidence on both sides is equally worthless :—27 Cal. 25.

Possession may be established constructively but only by the rightful owner :—24 Cal. 256; 1 C. W. N. 304; 29 Cal. 518; but even that must be shown to fall within 12 years before suit :—(1907) 12 C. W. N. 273; 7 C. L. J. 414 (it is not enough that the land was jungle some long time before suit).

As to when possession of part amounts to possession of the whole, see 9 Mad. 285; 16 I. C. 39, as to effect of isolated possession such as fishing, see (1910) 13 C. L. J. 625; 6 I. C. 392; as regards symbolical possession delivered by Courts, see 35 Bom. 79; 12 Bom. L. R. 95; 8 I. C. 639.

III. PREVIOUS POSSESSION ALONE SUFFICIENT:—

One is entitled to succeed on the strength merely of his previous possession.. To this extent, the second of the series of propositions laid down by the Full Bench in this case at 9 Cal., p. 750, should be modified, and the authorities on the point are collected in our Notes to 9 Cal. 39 supra.

It may be noted in this connection that the previous possession, when unaccompanied by proof of title, should be actual and not ideal.

The rule and its limits may be illustrated thus :—A is the owner of the land X, having title thereto. B is a trespasser; subsequently to the trespass, the land is under water for six years; and after six years, land re-forms on the site. B now occupies it for four years when he is dispossessed by, suppose, (1) A, the owner; (2) C, a stranger.

B can eject C on the strength of his previous possession for four years.

In a suit by B against A, the question depends on the length of his possession prior to the submersion. If that possession had lasted for 12 years, A's title became extinguished; 3 Cal. 796; but if it continued for less than that period, then, by the submersion, the true owner's possession was restored :—3 Cal. 796. 29 Cal. 518, and it prevails against the subsequent dispossession, although there was, say, 11 years possession previous to the submersion and four years possession subsequent thereto.

IV. WHEN CO-OWNER IS DISPOSSESSED—

On this point, see 9 Cal. 744 (753, 754) ; 3 C. W. N. 774 ; 31 Cal. 970 ; 32 Cal. 827 ; 1 C. L. J. 437 ; (1907) 6 C. L. J. 735 (742) : 35 Cal. 961 12 C. W. N. 127 ; 4 I. C. 298 : 5 L.B.R. 112 ; 1 I. C. 252 ; 19 Cal. 254 ; 21 Mad. 153 ; 27 All. 88.]

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 17th April, 1883.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE
MACPHERSON.

Anund Chundra Mundul and another.....Defendants

Nilmony Jourdar.....Plaintiff.*

Hindu Law—Inheritance—Descent of lands purchased by widow out of income of life-estate.

Land purchased by a Hindu widow with money derived from the income of her life-estate passes, when undisposed of by her, to the heirs of her husband as an increment to the estate, and not to her heirs as property over which she had absolute control.

Baboo Mohiny Mohun Roy for the Appellants.

Baboo Shoshee Bhusan Dutt for the Respondent.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment delivered by Macpherson, J.—The question raised in this appeal is, whether land purchased by a Hindu widow with money derived from the income of her life-estate, passes, when undisposed of by her, to [759] the heirs of her husband as an increment to the estate, or to her heirs as her own property over which she had absolute control.

It arises in this way : Gourmoni, a widow of one of three brothers, inherited her husband's one-third share of the family property. Being dispossessed by the other two brothers, she obtained against them decrees both for possession and for mesne profits, and in execution of the latter brought to sale and herself purchased their two-third share of the same property. Both Courts have found, and the fact is not now disputed, that this was an acquisition made out of the income of the property, in which she held a widow's life-estate, the purchase-money representing the usufruct of which she had been wrongfully deprived. Gourmoni was, however, under the necessity of borrowing money to carry on the litigation alluded to, and the lenders, who are the first two defendants in the case, obtained against her a decree for the amount lent. This they executed after her death, not against the heirs of her husband, but against those who were her heirs and who would take the property if it was her own, by attachment and sale of the two-third share which Gourmoni had bought, and they became themselves the purchasers. The plaintiff claims as purchaser prior to the last execution sale, from two of the three reversionary heirs, all of whom are parties to the suit. The contest, therefore, is between him as representing the reversioners, the undoubted owners of the one-third share which Gourmoni took as widow of her husband, and the first two defendants claiming under their purchase at the execution sale subsequent to the death of Gourmoni. It may be, as appellants' pleader contends, that the law is unsettled as to the power of a Hindu widow to alienate, beyond her own life interest, immoveable property purchased by her from the income of her life-estate; but it is unnecessary to determine this, as no question of any such alienation here arises. The point was discussed, though not decided, in the case of Hunsbutti Keram v. Ishri Dutt Koer (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 512). It may be noted that though both the learned Judges, before whom that case came, entertained doubt as to the particular question before them, they seemed to have no doubt that such property, when undisposed of by the widow, [760] passes on her death not as stridhan to her heirs, but to the heirs of her husband as an increment to the parent estate. And whatever her power of alienation may be, it seems clear that such is the law as regards the succession to property of which she made no disposition, the presumption being, in the absence of proof of intention to sever it from the bulk of the estate and appropriate it to herself, that she intended it to be an accretion to her husband's property and it would pass as such. This is the principle followed by the Privy Council in the case of Gouda Koer v. Koor Oodey Singh (14 B. L. R., 159). That was, it is true, a case governed by the Mitakshara law, but there seems, in this respect, no ground for distinction between the Mitakshara and the Dayabhaga. The case of Chundrabullee Debia v. Brody (9 W. R., 584) (a Bengal case) is also a direct authority on the point. It was there held that savings made by a widow, while enjoying the widow's estate, and undisposed of by her, would form part of the estate and go with it to the next heirs of her deceased husband. In that case the holder of a decree against a Hindu widow attempted after her death to take out execution for certain mesne profits which had been decreed to her, and which represented the usufruct of her estate. He was opposed by the heirs of her husband, and it was held that he could not execute unless he showed that the debt for which he held a decree was contracted by the widow for legal necessity and for the benefit of the estate—a question which in that stage of the case (viz., in the course of execution proceedings) could not be decided. That decision was followed in the case of Chowdry Bholanath Thakoor v. Bhagabutti Deyi (7 B. L. R., 93; 15 W. R., 63), to which the Mitakshara law was applicable, but this having been reversed by the Privy Council [Bhagabutti Deyi v. Chowdry Bholanath Thakoor (L. R., 2 I. A., 256)], is no authority. The remarks, however, of their Lordships in that case tend to show that, if the widow had taken, as supposed by this Court, a widow's estate, and not, as they hold, a life-estate under a family settlement with power to appropriate the profits, the decision as to the succession to the property [761] acquired by the widow out of the savings of the husband's estate would not have been wrong.

The only authority cited as supporting a contrary view is the case of Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Dinobundhoo Mullick (9 Moore's I. A., 123), where a widow was declared absolutely entitled in her own right to all such interest and accumulations as since the death of her deceased husband had arisen from the one-fifth part of certain accumulations which she had before been declared entitled to hold and enjoy as a Hindu widow in the manner prescribed by Hindu law. There, however, no question was raised as to the succession to the property on the widow's death, and the reversionary heirs of the husband were no parties to the case. On that, among other grounds, the Privy Council refused to treat that case as an authority in the case which I have before quoted of Gonda Koer v. Koor Oodey Singh (14 B. L. R., 159). Another ground certainly was that the case of Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Dinobundhoo Mullick (9 Moore's I. A., 123), was governed by law current in Bengal, while the Mitakshara law applied to the other case, but as I have already said no distinction has, in this respect, been pointed out in the law applicable to the two schools.

It has been broadly contended, that as the widow had in her life-time absolute control over the income of her husband's estate, that income and whatever property she acquired with it was her stridhan or separate property, and must devolve as such. It is open to doubt whether such property is, properly speaking, stridhan at all, but on the principle already enunciated it could only become so, or at least be regarded as her property, when she had shown an intention to appropriate it to herself and to sever it from her husband's estate. This answer therefore is sufficient, that whatever disposing power she may have had over such property, (and this it is not necessary in the present case to decide) she made no disposition and showed no intention of treating it as her separate property; the presumption therefore already alluded to arises, that she intended it to be an accretion to her husband's property, and it would pass as such to his heirs.

[762] As, therefore, the plaintiff represents the reversioners, and the appellants by their purchase acquired no title, I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Garth, C.J.—I quite agree that this appeal must be dismissed.

The case may seem a very hard one upon the defendants Nos. 1 and 2. They appear to have advanced their money to Gourmoni in good faith for the protection and recovery of her share of the property, and they might fairly look to that property for the payment of their advances.

And if they had taken the proper course, I think they might have done so. After obtaining a decree against Gourmoni they might either, if they had used due diligence, have enforced it by execution during her life, or they might have proceeded against the property in the hands of the reversionary heirs after her death.

But for some unaccountable reason, they chose to execute their decree, and to sell the property in execution, as belonging to Gourmoni's sisters, who had nothing whatever to do with it.

They, therefore took nothing by their purchase under that execution, and they must, in this suit at least, take the consequences of their ill-advised proceedings.

It is possible that they may still have a remedy against the property in the hands of the reversionary heirs, if they are not barred by limitation; but in this suit they must fail.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

[763] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 30th March, 1883.

PRESENT:

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT. CHIEF JUSTICE,
AND MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON.

Haranund Mozoomdar.....Plaintiff

versus

Prosunno Chunder Biswas and others.....Defendants.*

Misjoinder—Parties—Suit to recover property sold in execution of decree.

Certain properties were sold to A by private contract. Subsequently the properties were attached in execution of a decree against A's vendors and sold in execution to various purchasers. A instituted a suit against his vendors, the decree-holders, and the purchasers, to set aside the execution sale.

Held, that the suit was not defective by reason of misjoinder of parties.

THE plaintiff in this case alleged that the defendants 4 to 6 were the owners of certain lands, and that on the 1st Bysack 1286 (13th April 1879) they sold these lands to him; that after sale the defendants 1 to 3, in execution of a decree against the defendants 4 to 6, attached the lands and put them up to sale; that the plaintiff preferred a claim which was disallowed, and the properties were sold and purchased separately by the defendants 7 to 11. The plaintiff now sued to set aside the sale in execution, and to establish his right to the lands by virtue of the conveyance to him of the 1st Bysack 1286. The defendants 7 to 11 contended that the properties having been separately purchased at auction by different individuals, the plaintiff should have brought separate suits for the property purchased by each of them, and that the suit was wrongly framed. Both the lower Courts, on the authority of the case of Rajaram Tewari v. Luchman Prasad (B. L. R. Sup. Vol., 731: 8 W. R., 13) dismissed the suit.

The Plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Mohini Mohun Roy for the Appellant.

Baboo Rajendro Nath Bose for the Respondents.

[764] The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and MACPHERSON, J.), was delivered by Garth, C.J.—We think it clear that the lower Courts have made a mistake in this case.

They have dismissed the suit upon the ground that there was a misjoinder of defendants; or, in other words, that instead of bringing one suit against all the defendants, Nos. 7 to 11, who purchased at the execution sale different portions of the property in question, they ought to have brought five different suits, one against each of those defendants.

The plaintiff's case is, that before the execution sale, under which the defendants 7 to 11 purchased these properties, they were purchased by him from the execution-debtors by private contract, and that he took possession of them. These properties were afterwards attached in execution under a decree obtained against the judgment-debtors by the defendants Nos. 1 to 3, whereupon the plaintiff preferred a claim to the whole property in the execution proceedings, but the Court decided against him; and so it was sold and bought by the defendants 7 to 11.

The plaintiff then brought this suit against the defendants 7 to 11 to set aside the execution sale, and to establish his right to the property under the private sale to himself; and as the judgment-creditors and the judgment-debtors were both interested in the subject of the suit, he very properly made them parties.

The only point raised by the defendants upon the merits is, that the alleged sale to the plaintiff was not bonâ fide, but void as against defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and 7 to 11; and this, so far as we can see, is really the only question in the cause. But the defendants have raised the preliminary point, upon which the suit has been dismissed by the Courts below, that the plaintiff, instead of bringing one suit, should have brought five separate suits one against each of the defendants 7 to 11.

In support of this objection a Full Bench case has been referred to, Rajaram Tewari v. Luchman Prasad (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 731 : 8 W. R., 13), in which Sir BARNES PEACOCK in giving judgment observed upon the inconvenience of one suit being brought against several defendants, each of whom [766] had a distinct and separate interest, and each of whose cases depended upon different points and different evidence.

That case appears to us to be very clearly distinguishable from the present; and in order to understand the distinction, it is only necessary to pay a little attention to the Full Bench judgment. It will be observed that the defendants in that case claimed under different titles, and that their respective cases depended upon wholly diverse evidence and considerations.

The case of each defendant was a separate contest. There was therefore ample reason for the remark of Sir BARNES PEACOCK at the close of the case: "The necessity of separating all these different cases in delivering judgment in appeal shows the difficulty and annoyance to which defendants must be put by being joined in one action in respect of different causes of action, to set aside various deeds executed under different circumstances, and in respect of which they have no common interest."

The present is a case of a totally different character. The plaintiff has but one object, namely, to establish his private purchase as against the sale in execution; and the defendants, who contest his claim, have but one defence, which is common to them all, viz., that the plaintiff's purchase is invalid.

The plaintiff might, as a matter of strict law, if he had been so advised, have brought five different suits instead of one, each to try the self-same question; but if he had done so, he would probably have incurred a good deal of blame, and not without good reason, for multiplying suits and expense to no good purpose.

There is also another consideration in this case, which does not appear to have occurred to either of the Courts below, namely, that by dismissing this suit upon the preliminary point they were depriving the plaintiff for ever of trying his case against the defendants upon the merits. If, as the defendants contend, the plaintiff had but one year after the order in the execution proceedings to bring his suit, the effect of the dismissal of the suit upon this technical ground would have been to bar the door of justice against him for ever.

Courts of law should be specially careful in dealing with technical objections to see what effect their decision will have in defeating substantial justice.

[766] The case must go back to the Court of First Instance for retrial upon its merits.

The respondents must pay to the appellant the costs of the proceedings in all the Courts so far as they have gone, inasmuch as it was at their instance that the preliminary objection has been allowed.

Appeal allowed.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

The 17th November and 9th December, 1882.

PRESENT :

LORD FITZGERALD, SIR B. PEACOCK, SIR R. P. COLLIER, SIR R. COUCH,
AND SIR A. HOBHOUSE.

Janoki Debi.....Plaintiff

versus

Gopal Acharjia Goswami and others.....Defendants.

[On appeal from the High Court at Fort William in Bengal.]

Hindu Law—Endowment - Succession to the management of a religious endowment, as sebit—Usage of the institution.

On a claim to succeed to the management, as sebit, of a religious institution endowed with property, it was contended that in the absence of prescribed rule, or of established usage, succession took place according to the ordinary rules of the Hindu law of inheritance, where the sebit led a family life.

Held, that, where owing to the absence of documentary or other direct evidence, it does not appear what rule of succession has been laid down by the endower, it must be proved by evidence what is the usage. In the present instance the usage did not support the claim ; and, upon the evidence, the claimant, who was out of possession, failed to make a title.

APPEAL from a decree of the High Court (29th January 1877), upholding a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Manbhoom (31st August 1874), whereby appellant's suit was dismissed.

The appellant claimed to succeed to the management of a religious endowment, as sebit, and set up a title relying on the application of the ordinary rules of the Hindu law of inheritance.

Whether those rules were applicable to the succession to the management of this institution, and also, whether a title under them had been made out, were questions decided, among others, in the judgment of the High Court (Janokee Debia v. Gopal Acharjea, I. L. R., 2 Cal., 365), forming the subject of this appeal.

[767] The endowment, of which the appellant claimed to have inherited the maurasi right of management, with possession, comprised 57½ villages, described in the plaint as brahmottar and debattar lands, in Pergunnah Chaurian in Manbhoom, valued at more than 2½ lakhs of rupees.

These had been granted by former Rajahs of Panchkot or Pachit, for maintaining the Séba, or worship, of Kesbab Rai, a local deity worshipped at Bero by the gurus of the family of the Rajah for the time being. The principal respondent who asserted his right to the guddi of the institution was Sri Gopal Acharjia Goswami, the natural father of the appellant's deceased husband, Bijai Lakhan. According to the appellant's case, Bijai had been duly adopted in infancy by Lakhan, formerly a sebaite of the institution, who died in 1859. Bijai died in 1863, a minor and childless, leaving the appellant his widow, also then a minor, on whose behalf, as she now alleged, the Déb Séba was performed by her relations; and according to a ruffanama, with which she now declined compliance, part of the income of the institution was set apart for her.

As to the validity of the adoption of Bijai Lakhan, which had been disputed on the ground of his having been the eldest son of his natural father, there was no appeal preferred against so much of the judgment of the High Court (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 366) (MARKBY and MITTER, JJ.), as held the adoption not to have been thereby invalidated.

As to another question, viz., whether, inasmuch as the institution at Bero had been endowed by the Pachit Rajahs, the title of any sebaite was complete without confirmation of it by the Rajah of the day (the present Rajah having intervened as a defendant), both the Indian Courts had found against the Rajah's having any such right.

All the facts material to this report are stated in their Lordships' judgment.

On this appeal, -

Mr. Cowell appeared for the Appellant.

Mr. C. W. Arathoon for the Respondents.

[768] For the appellant it was argued that, where (as here) the sebaite led a family life, in the absence of any rule prescribed for the succession to the headship of the institution by those who had endowed it, and also in the absence of any established usage in the matter, the office of sebaite descended in the family according to the ordinary rules of inheritance of Hindu law. Reliance was placed on the words of Sir T. Strange (1 Strange, Hindu Law, Chap. VI p. 151), who, after distinguishing lands endowed for religious purposes as not inheritable at all, as private property, adds: "Though the management of them, for their appropriate object, passes by inheritance subject to usage, as in the case of many of the religious establishments in Bengal, where the superintendence is, by custom, on the death of the incumbent, elective by the neighbouring 'mohants' or principals of other similar ones." In the case of this institution the right of management of the property forming the endowment was not severed from the religious office: and no such usage as was referred to in the above, and in Greedharce Doss v. Nundokissore Doss Mohant (11 Moore's I.A., 403), had been proved. Without such proof of special usage the widow's claim, founded on the ordinary rules of inheritance, could not be defeated, and her title was complete. The burden of proving either prescribed rule, or special usage, was on the defence, and neither of them having been proved the canon of descent by Hindu law must prevail.

* In the evidence in this case the Bengali word "sebaite," and the Hindustani "mohant" were used indifferently.

Reference was also made to Strange's Hindu Law, Vol. I, Chap. IX; and to Vol. II, appendix to Chap. IX, a note by Colebrooke; Mayne's Hindu Law and Usage, s. 364; Widow of Rajah Chutter Sein v. Younger Widow (1 Sel. Rep., 180); Jotinudro Mohun Tagore v. Ganendro Mohun Tagore (9 B. L. R., 377); Rajah Chundernath Roy v. Koor Gobindnath Roy (11 B. L. R., 86); Mussamut Jai Bansi Kunwar v. Chattardhari Singh (5 B. L. R., 181); Rajah Ramalinga v. Perianayagam Pillai (the Ramnad case) (L. R., 1 I. A., 209); Neelkisto Deb Burmono v. Beerchunder Thakoor (12 Moore's I. A., 523: 3 B. L. R., P. C., 13).

[769] For the respondents Mr. C. W. Arathoon argued that the ordinary rules of the Hindu law of inheritance were not applicable in this case; and that, had they been so, the appellant had failed to show a good title according to them. If the ordinary rules of inheritance prevailed, a title traced through four succeeding daughters could not be said to accord with any rule of Hindu law. But both the Courts in India had found that the succession in this case was not regulated by the Hindu law of inheritance, and thus the claim was not maintainable. As a general rule, moreover, a woman could not hold the office of sebait; and, if this institution was to be considered an exceptional one, proof of its being so should have been given by the plaintiff. On the contrary, however, the weight of the evidence showed that no one except the Raj Guru of the Pachit family could be the sebait of the institution at Bero. Again, the defendant Sri Gopal Acharjia had a title supported by family arrangement, and equity favoured such arrangements, when made bonâ fide, as this had been. On the question, how the office of sebait should be disposed of, where, from circumstances, there could be no recourse to any rule of the foundation, reference was made to Mahdo Das v. Kamta Dass (1 L. R., 1 All., 539); Niranyan Barthi v. Padarnath Barthi [1 S.D.A. (N.-W.P.) 1864, p. 512].

Mr. Cowell replied.

Their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by

Sir R. Couch.—The appellant in this case brought a suit to recover possession of certain properties which she alleged in the plaint to be partly brahmottar and partly debattar, the latter being dedicated to certain deities of the names of Keshub Rai and others, and also for the possession of the deities themselves from the hands of the first defendant, Sri Gopal Acharjia Goswami. Although the plaintiff described part of the properties claimed as her own brahmottar, which had devolved upon her by right of inheritance, it appeared on the hearing before the first Court, and was admitted by both parties, that the whole of the properties claimed belonged to the deities.

The plaintiff's case was that the properties were in the possession of Lakhan Acharjia Goswami as sebait of the idols; that he [770] having no son of his body, took the plaintiff's husband, Bijai Lakhan Acharjia, in adoption, and died in October or November 1859; that Bijai Lakhan being then a minor, his mother took possession of the properties on his behalf, the right of sebaitship having devolved upon him in the same way as any other property of the deceased would have devolved upon him by right of inheritance; that the idols were established by a remote ancestor of her husband, and the right had devolved from one person to another, following the rule which governs the succession of an ordinary heritable property.

The plaintiff further alleged that the mother remained in possession, on behalf of her minor son, up to 1863, when he died, and the right of sebaitship devolved upon the plaintiff, as his widow, but she being then a minor her mother-in-law managed the Déb Sébn for her up to the time of her death, which occurred in March 1864; that upon the death of her mother-in-law, the first defendant, Gopal Acharjia, one of the respondents in this appeal, who was the natural father of Bijai Lakhan, attempted to take possession of the properties along with the Déb Séba, and was opposed on her behalf by her father and maternal uncle, the second and third defendants and also respondents, and that a compromise was effected between them, which the plaintiff sought to set aside as collusive. As the father and uncle do not appear to have had any legal authority to act as the plaintiff's guardians, and the compromise has not been relied upon, it is unnecessary to notice it further.

The defence of Gopal Acharjia was, that the suit was barred by the law of limitation; that the adoption of the plaintiff's husband was not valid according to Hindu law; that the plaintiff, being a female, was not competent to perform the duties which ordinarily devolve upon a sebait, and to fill the office; and that, according to the usage of the family, and the rules regulating the appointment of mohants to the guddi, he was entitled to succeed to the Déb Séba estate on the death of Bijai Lakhan, and the plaintiff had no right whatever; that originally the Dob Seba was founded by an ancestor of the present Raja of Pachit, and the title of sebait was not complete unless he was confirmed in his appointment by the Rajah of Pachit for the [771] time being; and that Raja Nilmoni Singh Deo, the present Rajah, had made the confirmation in his favour. Rajah Nilmoni Sing Deo was added as a defendant, and put in a written statement to the same effect as the last allegation.

The first Court decided the question of limitation in the plaintiff's favour, and the defendants did not appeal from that decision. It then found that the plaintiff's husband Bijai was duly adopted by Lakhan Acharjia, and the customary ceremonies of adoption were performed, but that, he being the eldest son of Gopal Acharjia, his adoption by Lakhan was invalid.

The suit was dismissed, and the plaintiff appealed to the High Court, which held that the lower Court was wrong in holding that the adoption of the plaintiff's husband was invalid by reason of his having been the eldest son of his natural father; but upon the question whether the plaintiff was entitled upon the death of her husband to succeed as sebait, the Court held that although there was no satisfactory evidence that the appointments of sebait had been made by the Rajah of Pachit, the evidence did not establish the plaintiff's right to succeed under the Hindu law of inheritance. The appeal was therefore dismissed.

The plaintiff has appealed to Her Majesty in Council, and it has been contended on her behalf that, in the absence of prescribed rules, or usage, the ordinary law of inheritance applies.

It appears to follow from the judgments of their Lordships in Greedharee Doss v. Nundokissore Doss Mohant (11 Moore's I. A., 428), Rajah Muttra Ramalinga Setupati v. Perianayagum Pillai (L. R., 1 I. A., 209), and Rajah Vurmah Valia v. Rajah Vurmah Mutha [L. R. 4 I. A., 76 (see p. 83): s.c., I. L. R., 1 Mad., 235], that when, owing to the absence of documentary or other direct evidence, it does not appear what rule of succession has been laid down by the endower of a religious institution, it must be proved by evidence what is the usage.

The greater part of the villages in dispute were dedicated to the idols more than a century ago, by the then Rajah of Panchkot or Pachit, and from time to time other villages have been added to the endowment. The first sebait was Rungraj [772] Goswami, who left an only daughter, Auchuma, who married, and had issue an only daughter, Bencooma; she married, and her only issue was a daughter, Lukhipria, and according to the plaintiff's case Lukhipria had an only daughter, Kedro Bibi, who married Lakhan Acharjia, and had a son, Srinibash, the grandfather of the plaintiff's husband. The plaintiff asserted that the four daughters succeeded each other as sobaits; the defendant Gopal on the contrary asserted that their husbands were the sobaits. It appeared, however, that Lukhipria held the guddi for nearly 60 years, her husband having died first, which is inconsistent with the latter contention. Now, whether the four daughters succeeded each other or their husbands were the sobaits, the succession was not according to Hindu law, as a daughter's daughter is not an heir except in certain cases of stridhan, and a son-in-law has no right of succession. There is no doubt considerable difficulty in ascertaining what is the rule of succession to this office, but it is certain that the usage has not been according to the ordinary rules of inheritance under Hindu law. Not only does the usage not support the plaintiff's claim, but it is opposed to it. It is not for their Lordships to consider whether there is any infirmity in the title of the respondent Gopal, who has been in possession many years, with the consent, if not by the appointment, of the Rajah. The plaintiff being out of possession must recover upon the strength of her own title, and not on the weakness of that of the defendant. Their Lordships have, therefore, only to consider whether the appellant has made out her title, and they are of opinion that the High Court was right in holding that she had not. They will humbly advise Her Majesty to confirm the judgment of the High Court, and to dismiss the appeal. The costs will be paid by the Appellant.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the Appellant: Messrs. Barrow and Rogers.

PRESENT:

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KNIGHT, CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE CUNNINGHAM.

Sreenath Roy.....Plaintiff

Radhanath Mookerjee.....Defendant.

Appeal—Administration suit—Order directing an account—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 244.

An order directing an account is not an order in the nature of a final decree, and is unappealable: such an order merely directs certain proceedings to be taken, in order that a final decree may thereafter be made.

By a decree, dated the 3rd September 1877, in an administration suit between Sreenath Roy v. Radhanath Mookerjee and others, it was, amongst other things, ordered that Sreenath Roy was entitled to recover from the estate of Jogendronath Mookerjee a sum of Rs. 18,000 with interest, and the further hearing of the suit was adjourned for the taking of accounts, the Receiver of the Court being appointed Receiver to the estate of Jogendronath Mookerjee; and the consideration of further directions was reserved until after the account and enquiries directed should be taken and made, liberty being reserved to all parties to apply as they might have occasion.

In 1874 and 1875 two suits, Nos. 67 of 1874 and 307 of 1875, between Radhanath Mookerjee, an infant (son and heir of Jogendronath Mookerjee) by his mother and next friend v. Chunder Kant Mookerjee and others, and Koosum Coomaree Dabee, widow of Ramnarain Mookerjee v. Chunder Kant Mookerjee and others, were instituted for the partition of the joint family estate of Ramnarain Mookerjee; and on the 13th September 1880, an order was passed in these two suits (which had been amalgamated), directing that the accounts filed by the defendants in the first suit should be taken as they stood up to the death of Jogendronath, and that the defendants Chunder Kant and Prankristo should pay to the infant plaintiff, Radhanath, in that suit, Rs. 5,000 in full of the said account; and that they should, out of the infant plaintiff's share in the joint estate, when the value of the same should have been ascertained, make provision for the payment [774] of the costs of the suits to administer the estate of Ramnarain and Jogendronath Mookerjee and for the payment of the debts of the said Jogendronath and the legacies left by Ramnarain.

The defendants Chunder Kant and Prankristo, under the provisions of rule 594 of the High Court, paid into the hands of the Court Receiver, in pursuance of the order last mentioned, Rs. 5,000 to the credit of the infant Radhanath.

The plaintiff in the administration suit, Sreenath Roy, then applied to the Court for an order, directing the Court Receiver to transfer the said sum of Rs. 5,000, after deducting his usual commission and charges, to the credit of the administration suit, and for the application of that sum in payment of the debt due to him and the other creditors of the estate of Jogendronath who had proved their claims: and further asked that the Receiver might be directed to sell the properties then in his possession for the above purposes.

The grounds for the application were (1), that the Receiver had not as yet made any provision for the payment of the debts of Jogendronath, and that there was ample property belonging to the estate of Jogendronath which had come to the hands of the infant defendant, and which was in the hands of Receiver to satisfy these debts; (2), that the debt due to Sreenath Roy, under the decree of the 3rd September 1877, had been outstanding for more than four years, and that interest was running on it both to his detriment and that of the infant Radhanath Mookerjee.

Nobin Chund Boral, attorney on behalf of the infant Radhanath Mookerjee, opposed the application and put in an affidavit, stating that on the 13th September 1877, the cause in which their present application was made was set down on the reference board, and that Mr. Justice WILSON, after going through the accounts, and on being informed that the bulk of the property belonging to the estate of Jogendronath Mookerjee, deceased, consisted of one undivided fifth share in certain landed property, which formed the subject-matter of the partition suits numbered 67 of 1874 and 307 of 1875, which had been amalgamated for the purpose of taking the accounts, directed the reference to stand over until the accounts were taken; that he had a large claim for [775] costs which had been already ordered to be paid to him out of the joint estate; and he submitted that the relief sought could not be granted on the present application inasmuch as the suit should have been set down for further directions and the application then made.

Mr. Allen for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Threllyan for the Defendant.

On the 16th March 1882, Mr. Justice WILSON refused the application with costs.

Mr. R. Mitra, for the Respondent, objected that no appeal would lie.

Mr. Allen for the Appellant contended that the order passed by the Court must be taken as an order made under s. 244 of Act X of 1877, it being a question relating to the "execution, discharge and (partial) satisfaction" of the decree in the administration suit; and that under s. 2 of the same Act, "an order," determining any question mentioned or referred to in s. 244, but not specified in s. 588, is defined to be "a decree," and is therefore appealable: and, further, that an appeal lay under s. 15 of the Charter from the judgment of a single Judge of the High Court: and he submitted that on one or other of these grounds an appeal did therefore lie.

The following Judgments were delivered by the Court (GARTH, C.J., and CUNNINGHAM, J.)

Garth, C.J.-- I am of opinion that the preliminary objection must prevail, and that no appeal lies in this case.

Mr. Allen has contended that the order which is appealed against is one made under s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code, and is therefore appealable under s. 2 of that Act, as amended by Act XII of 1879.

The suit in which the order was made is an administration suit brought by the plaintiff, a creditor, for administering the estate of Jogendronath Mookerjee, and for having the plaintiff's debts ascertained, and paid out of the assets. A decree was obtained, declaring the plaintiff entitled to the sum which he claims, and directing an account to be taken in the usual way.

[776] The party to the suit who represents the estate is an infant, who appears by guardian, and an attorney named Nobin Chund Boral acts for the guardian.

It then appears that in another suit a sum of Rs. 5,000 has been placed in the hands of the Receiver, on account of the infant defendant in this suit; and an application was made to the Judge in the Court below that this Rs. 5,000 should be paid over to the credit of this suit, and that it should be applied in payment of the debts to the plaintiff and the other creditors of the intestate, who have proved their claims in the suit; and that the said Receiver should sell the properties in his possession and apply the proceeds towards payment of the said debts pro tanto.

This application, so far as it concerned the Rs. 5,000, would seem to have been a reasonable and a necessary one; but it was objected to on the part of the infant; and the learned Judge refused the application, not (so far as I can judge from the note which was made by the officer of the Court), because there was no ground for making it, but because it was not made in proper form.

However this may be, the plaintiff did not apply again, as suggested by the learned Judge. If he had done so, and if the sum of Rs. 5,000 had really belonged to the estate, the application would probably have been successful. But he took the course of appealing to this Court, and has insisted upon his right of appealing upon the ground that the order of the learned Judge was a decree made under s. 244 of Act X of 1877, as being "a decision upon a question which related to the execution of the decree."

I am clearly of opinion, looking at what I conceive to be the true meaning of the word "execution" in that and the preceding sections of the Code, that the order in this case is not appealable.

The section forms part of Chapter XIX of the Code, comprising ss. 223 to 343, which all relate "to the execution of decrees," and from the tenor of those sections it seems clear to me that the words "execution of decrees" at the heading of the chapter mean the enforcement of the decrees of the Courts, by what is generally known as "process of execution." The different kinds [777] of execution dealt within those sections are against the person and property of the judgment-debtor, or for the restoration of any specific property, land, or goods, or for compelling the judgment-debtor, by attachment, to obey the decree of the Court.

But the order with which we are dealing is of a totally different character.

The order for accounts is not in the nature of a final decree. It only directs certain proceedings to be taken, in order that a final decree may hereafter be made; and the application by Mr. Allon was only an interlocutory one, made in the course of those proceedings, and certainly not for the purpose of enforcing the decree of the Court by a process of execution properly so called.

Mr. Allen contends that his application was one in aid and execution of the decree which the Court has already made; now, if an order of this kind can be appealed against, it seems to me that all the numerous interlocutory orders made in the course of taking accounts or otherwise carrying out the directions of the Court would be equally appealable.

I think therefore that upon this ground the appeal should be dismissed with costs on scale 2.

Cunningham, J.—I am of the same opinion. I would only add that the reasons that my Lord has given seem to be reinforced by the language of s. 213 and the form No. 130 of the fourth schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure, which show that in the view of the framers of the Code what is called an administration decree is not really a decree at all, but merely a preliminary order.

Appeal dismissed.

[778] ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 27th January, 1883.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND
MR. JUSTICE CUNNINGHAM.

Gopal Chunder Mukerjee and others.....Plaintiffs

versus

Juddoo Lall Mullick.....Defendant.

Right of way—Extent of user—Purpose for which right claimed is strictly identical with original purpose contemplated at commencement of right.

Where a right of way for a particular purpose is proved to have existed for upwards of 20 years, the Court is not bound to confine the right to the precise number of times in the year that it has been exercised, but may construe it as a right to use the road at all convenient times for the particular purpose.

THIS was a suit brought by two infants, by their next friend, to have their right to an alleged passage over the defendant's land declared, and to have certain obstructions to such passage, and also certain alleged obstructions to the grating of a drain running under the land, removed, and for damages and for an injunction.

The plaintiffs alleged that they were the owners of a certain house, to which was attached a privy which, before the construction of the underground drainage by the Municipality, used to be drained as of right by, and through, a small drain which ran between their own house and the house of the defendant, finally discharging itself into the large Municipal drain, and that their privy had been at all times as of right cleaned by their servants, who, for such purpose passed and repassed over the drain, and that this right of way both they and their predecessors in title had enjoyed for more than forty years; that in 1879 the Municipality constructed an underground drain in the place of their large drain, and stopped the large drain up, and that they (the plaintiffs) at their own expense opened out a communication, by means of pipes, between this underground drain of the Municipality and their own small drain, the privy since that date being drained through the pipes so laid down. That they then filled in their original small drain, and made a path over it, which was used both by themselves and their servants in passing and repassing to the privy; that in December 1880 the defendant obstructed this pathway by placing rubbish upon it, and [779] thus prevented them (the plaintiffs) and their servants from using the same, and at the same time the defendant also blocked up the grating of a certain surface drain belonging to the plaintiffs and thereby obstructed the discharge of water into their pipes.

The plaintiffs did not claim any ownership in the soil of the pathway, but brought this suit for the purposes abovementioned.

The defendant claimed to be absolute owner of the land claimed as the plaintiffs' right of way, and denied the plaintiffs' claim to the right of way, asserting that it had not been enjoyed as of right since February 1877. He further stated that the filling up of the drain took place in December 1877 and not in 1879.

Mr. Palit for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Branson and Mr. Phillips for the Defendant.

Mr. Justice WILSON found that the soil of the place in question was in the defendant, and that the plaintiffs had not satisfactorily shown that they exercised, for twenty years, the right they claimed; that it was impossible for the plaintiffs to have exercised their right of way during the time the small drain was in existence; and that the fact that it had been filled in, and made into a passage about ten or twelve years back, made it impossible for the plaintiffs to have used the right of way for twenty years; and, further, considering that the user of the Municipal mehters was not such as to furnish evidence of previous user, he dismissed the suit.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Mr. Evans, Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. Palit for the Appellants.

The Advocate-General (Offg. Mr. Phillips) and Mr. Branson for the Respondent.

Mr. Phillips.—The ordinary practice at the time that the alleged user of the plaintiffs began, was to clear the privies three or four times a year, but now they are cleaned out every day; I don't, however, restrict them to the three or four times, but I restrict them to the user they had before the sudden change in the practice, in [780] consequence of the Municipality taking up the work, in other words, to the ordinary and reasonable user at the commencement of the user. It is in such a user that the defendant is assumed to have acquiesced, and although he may have acquiesced, for the last four or five years in a larger user, this will not enlarge the right, unless continued for 20 years, although it might, if known, have been evidence to show that the increased user was in accordance with the right. A user cannot be increased. Allan v. Gomme (11 A. and E., 759) was a case of an increased or altered user in consequence of the conversion of a wood house into a cottage. In Henning v. Burnit (8 Exch., 187) PARKE, B., says, "A right of way to a cottage ceases if the cottage is turned into a tan yard." These were cases of grants, but they show that if you have a limited right of way you cannot increase the user to make it a general right of way. In the case of Williams v. James (L. R., 2 C. P., 577) the defendant, who was entitled to a right of way by user over the plaintiffs' land from field N, honestly and without the intention of increasing the right of user, used the way for the purpose of carting from field N some hay stacked there, which had been grown partly there, and partly on land adjoining, and it was held not to be an excess user in the user of the right of way; the principle is, however, clearly laid down that the right is measured by the actual user. In Bazendale v. McMurray (L. R. 2 Ch. App., 790) the defendant had obtained the prescriptive right to discharge into a river washings arising from the manufacture of rags in the manufacture of paper; he afterwards made his paper from vegetable fibre and discharged the refuse as before into the river; it was held in a suit to restrain the defendant from polluting the river to a greater extent than it was polluted before the change in the system of manufacture, that the easement to which he was entitled was a right to discharge into the river the washings produced by the manufacture of paper in the reasonable and proper course of such manufacture, using any proper materials for the purpose, but not substantially increasing the pollution; and that the onus lay on the plaintiff to show any increase of pollution.

Where an easement to land is granted, the use of it will be restricted to a reasonable use for the purpose of the land in the [781] condition in which it was when the grant was made or the user took place. Wood v. Saunders (L.

R., 10 Ch. App. 582) was the case of a grant; there A demised to B a house with the right to the free passage of water and soil in and to the existing cesspools, and to certain drains then in existence. B was not at liberty to alter the buildings without the lessor's consent, which was never obtained. B in 1872 bought the house, and at that time part only of the drains from the house ran into a moat which belonged to A. B in 1873, enlarged his house and turned it into lunatic asylum with 150 inmates and discharged the whole drainage of the house into the moat. A threatened to stop the drains, and B filed a bill to restrain him from so doing, and the plaintiff obtained an order protecting him in the reasonable use of the cesspool, to the extent to which the same was used prior to the demise to him. See also Wimbledon and Putney Commons Conservators v. Dixon (L. R., 1 Ch. D., 362).

The case of Finch v. Great Western Railway Co. (L. R., 5 Ex. D., 254) recognizes the principle that the extent of a right by user is to be measured by the extent of the user. But there are other objections to the plaintiffs' claim.

The user alleged is in its nature likely to escape observation, and it is not shown to have been open, or such as would be likely to attract any attention. Moreover, from the situation of the buildings, there would be very little opportunity to observe the plaintiffs' mehters. A burden ought not to be imposed upon another, upon such a user as this—see Bhuban Mohun Banerjee v. Elliot (6 B. L. R., at pp. 98 and 104). Again the plaintiffs claim a right for themselves and their servants: the Municipal mehters are not their servants nor under their control. At any rate, even if they could exercise their right through them, the plaintiffs could not acquire such a right by their choosing to come to the defendant's house over the plaintiffs' land.

But there is a fatal objection, and that is, that according to the evidence all that the Municipal mehter did was to come to plaintiffs' privies, clean them and then go on to the defendant's. [782] This took place for about the last three years, and there is no other evidence as to their proceedings. This, however, is not a user of the way at all: the mehter came on the defendants' land not in exercise of any right of the plaintiffs, but for the purpose of cleaning the defendant's privy, and he merely went on from there for his own convenience, and not in the exercise of any right of the plaintiffs'. Then, if this is so, there is no user within two years of suit, as required by s. 27 of the Limitation Act. User ought to be proved in every year, or at any rate, in the first and last years of the term. Parker v. Mitchell (11 A. & E., 788); Lowe v. Carpenter (6 Ex., 825).

Garth, C. J.—I regret very much that the parties in this case should not have been able to adopt the suggestion of the Court, and settle their differences out of Court; but as they have failed to do so, it is necessary that we should give our judgment; and I feel bound to say that I cannot take the same view of the case as the learned Judge in the Court below.

I quite think that the plaintiffs' evidence is not as precise as it might have been, either as to the number of years, during which the right claimed has been exercised, or as to the particular mode or times of the alleged enjoyment.

It very rarely happens in my experience that the evidence of native witnesses in cases of this kind is very accurate. But on the whole I think it sufficiently appears that a right, such as the plaintiffs' claim, has been exercised from time to time for upwards of 20 years before suit; and the probabilities of the case seem to me greatly in favour of that view.

Certain facts giving rise to those probabilities are almost beyond dispute. The plaintiffs' house has existed substantially in its present state for a great number of years; the western wall of that house abutted upon the defendant's premises ; and certain privies, habitually used by the inmates of that house, were situate in the south-west corner of the plaintiffs' compound.

Before the new sanitary rules were made by the Calcutta Municipality, these privies were used and managed in the same way as [783] most others in the native quarters of Calcutta ; that is to say, their contents were received into cesspools sunk in the ground, and were then emptied and carried away from time to time as convenience or necessity required.

There also seems no doubt that the fall of the ground, on which the plaintiffs' house was built, was from south to north, and that from these privies there was a passage enclosed by two walls running from south to north along the western boundary of the plaintiffs' premises, by means of which all the refuse water from the cesspools flowed away to the north-west corner of those premises, where there was a door opening out upon a drain, into which certain privies, used by the defendant's family, emptied themselves.

This drain, the soil of which belonged to the defendant, was an open one. It received through the door, which I have just mentioned, the refuse water of the plaintiffs' privies ; and it then continued to run from south to north into Prosunno Coomar Tagoro's Street, receiving also in its way the contents of other privies.

The plaintiffs' case is, that from time to time their cesspools were emptied by mehters in the usual way, and their contents carried along the passage between the two walls, and so along this open drain into Prosunno Coomar Tagore's Street. It is clear that if the privies were used, about which there seems to be no doubt, their contents must have been emptied somewhere ; and it is neither proved nor suggested by the defendant that there was any other mode by which their contents were removed, except that which has been deposed to by the plaintiffs' witnesses. And it is very difficult to understand for what purpose the inner wall forming the passage from south to north could have been built, except for carrying off the contents of the cesspools.

The only real question of fact, as it seems to me, is, whether there is sufficient proof that the plaintiffs have used the open drain for the purpose alleged for the period of 20 years before suit. Now it certainly seems highly probable that if the house itself has existed in its present condition for some 30 or 40 years, the same means has been always adopted for emptying the cess-[784] pools ; and it is certainly proved to my satisfaction that the door at the north-west corner of the plaintiffs' premises, through which it is said that the mehters passed, is a very old door ; and it is difficult to see for what purpose that door could have been placed there or used, except that of cleaning out the cesspools.

The durwan, who has been in the plaintiffs' service for from 20 to 25 years, says that he has known that door ever since he was in their service ; and that it was an old door when he came there. He tells us that mehters used always to come through it for the purpose of removing the night-soil ; that when they came, they used to call to him to open the door, and that when they went away they used to call to him to lock it ; and that he invariably kept the door locked from the inside. He says this was always done three or four times a year ; and he has also done the same for the Municipal mehters since they have cleaned the privies.

The evidence of this man is confirmed by that of Oghore, the sweeper, who tells us that he has been in service of the plaintiffs and their father for 16 or 17 years ; that he employed the mehters to wash the privies and clean the drain ; and that he used to bring mehters of his own for the purpose, whom he paid with his master's money. He describes clearly enough the way in which they used to clean the cesspools, and carry out the contents, along the west side of the plaintiffs' premises into the open drain beyond.

I confess I see no sufficient reason for doubting the truth of what these men have stated, and their evidence is certainly corroborated by Tarrabullub Chatterjee, an attorney of this Court, who know the premises upwards of 25 or 30 years ago, and speaks to the way in which the mehters used to come and cleanse the privies ; and also by Dwarkanauth Banerjee, who lives in an adjoining house, and who says that he has known the drain between plaintiffs' and defendant's premises for upwards of 25 years.

The only point which the defendant has attempted to make in opposition to this evidence of the plaintiffs is, that the open drain along which it is said the mehters passed, was generally [785] in such a filthy state from the quantity of foul matter which flowed into it, that it was impossible for mehters to pass down it in the manner described by the plaintiffs' witnesses.

In support of this view the defendant himself, Baboo Juddoo Lall Mullick, was called as a witness. He describes the dirty state in which the drain was, partly from his own privies and partly from those of his tenants being emptied into it. He says it was choked with filth and weeds, and that he never saw any one pass down there ; and Mr. Edwards, who is the Road and Conservancy Overseer under the Municipality, says that he has known the drain since 1875, and that it was in a very foul state and very full of night-soil. He states, however, that while the drain was being cleaned, he did go up it himself, but not beyond a certain distance.

I observe that the learned Judge in the Court below, in dismissing the plaintiffs' case, has laid some stress upon the evidence of these two witnesses. Now I have no doubt it is quite true that Baboo Juddoo Lall Mullick, who is a gentleman of good fortune and position, may never have seen the mehters going backward and forward to plaintiffs' privies, because they did not go there often, and when they did, it was very early in the morning, and I can quite understand that Mr. Edwards would naturally be disinclined to walk through a quantity of night-soil, unless pressed by some urgent necessity to do so. But this was all part of the mehters' business, and it appears, moreover, that there were certain seasons in the year when Baboo Juddoo Lall Mullick's privies were cleaned out, and it is probable that these seasons, were selected by the plaintiffs' servants to employ mehters to clean out their master's cesspools.

On the whole it appears to me that the evidence adduced by the plaintiffs shows a user of the right which they claim for upwards of twenty years before suit ; and I see nothing in the defendant's evidence to rebut it.

The only difficulty which I feel is, as to the extent of the plaintiffs' right. Are they entitled to the use of the drain only three or four times in a year, which, according to the evidence [786] of the durwan, was as often as they were in the habit of using it ; or ought we to give the evidence of user a more liberal construction, and say that they had a right to the drain for the purpose of cleansing their privies as often as necessity required ?

I confess I have had some doubt about this and I have found no direct authority upon the subject ; but I have come to the conclusion that the latter is the more reasonable view to adopt. The times at which the plaintiffs' cesspools were cleansed were (according to the evidence) no particular stated periods. The cesspools were emptied, according to native custom, as many times in the year, as they became full ; and I cannot doubt that if the number of the plaintiffs' family had increased, so that it became necessary to empty them more often, the plaintiffs would have had a right to use the drain for that purpose.

It has now become necessary, in consequence of the new Sanitary Rules of the Municipality, to cleanse the privies every morning; and if the true construction of the plaintiffs' right was, as I conceive it to be, to use the drain as often as was necessary for cleansing the privies, it follows that they may now use them every morning.

The times at which they should do this should of course be proper and convenient times. The evidence is that the filth was removed in the early mornings; and probably this would be the most convenient time now for its removal.

It has been strongly urged upon us that if we put this construction upon the plaintiffs' right, we shall be imposing upon the defendant, as the owner of the servient tenement, a much heavier burthen than according to the ancient user of the drain he ought to bear. But it must be borne in mind that, so far as the quantity of sewage is concerned, no larger quantity will be carried down the drain now than has always been carried heretofore. It will only be carried more frequently, and in much smaller quantities, and, so far as health is concerned, I suppose that the present system is likely to be more healthy than the former one.

I think, therefore, that the judgment of the Court below should be reversed, and that the plaintiffs should be declared entitled to use the drain in question, for the purpose of carrying away their night-soil at all convenient times in the year.

[787] The defendant will be restrained from interfering with the plaintiffs' proper user of the drain; but as the suit was brought to try what was a question of right, we do not consider that there is any ground for awarding substantial damages.

The plaintiffs will be entitled to their costs in both Courts on scale 2.

Cunningham, J.—I concur in holding that the enjoyment of an easement for twenty years prior to the suit is established by the evidence, and also in the view that the easement must be taken to have been a right of way for the purpose of cleansing the plaintiffs' privies at all such times as the plaintiffs could reasonably claim to exercise such a right. Several cases were cited before us in support of the contention that, as in cases of rights which depend on user, "the right acquired must be measured by the extent of the enjoyment which is proved," we ought in this instance to limit the plaintiffs' right of way to the number of occasions in the year on which it could be shown that the way had been used: but the cases do not appear to me to justify such a restriction. It is no doubt the rule that where there is a right of way proved by user, the extent of the right must be proved by the extent of the user. Wimbledon and Putney Commons Conservators v. Dixon (L. R., 1 Ch. D., 362); Finch v. G. W. Railway (L. R., 5 Ex. D. 254) but neither these cases nor the others cited, Williams v. James (L. R., 2 C. P., 577), Allan v. Gomme (11 A. and E., 759), Henning v. Burnet (8 Exch., 187), appear to me to justify the view that, where a right of way for a particular purpose is proved, the number of occasions on which it may be enjoyed must be limited to the number of occasions on which it can be shown to have been exercised. The "extent of user," which the Courts have had occasion to consider in these cases, has had reference rather to some departure from the original purpose, or the application of the right to some matter other than that contemplated at the commencement of the right, than to frequency of the occasions on which the right may be enjoyed. In the present instance the purpose for which the right is claimed is strictly identical [788] with the original purpose, though inclination, custom, or a change of the law may lead to its more frequent exercise. On these grounds I concur in admitting the appeal with costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 26th February, 1883.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE WILSON.

Ishan Chunder Bandopadhyia.....Defendant

Indro Narain Gossami.....Plaintiff.*

Sale in execution of decree—Payment not certified to Court—

Fraud—Setting aside sale—Cause of action—Regular suit.

A obtained a money decree against B and others jointly for Rs. 112; and in consideration of a payment of Rs. 25 made by B agreed to release B from all liability under the decree. This payment was not certified to the Court, and A afterwards in execution of the decree had certain immovable property belonging to B put up for sale, and this property he purchased himself.

Held, that a suit would lie by B to set aside the sale and to recover the property from A.

THE facts of this case are stated as follows by the Judge of the lower Appellate Court :—

“On the 19th of April 1873 the defendant, Ishan Chunder Bandopadhyia, obtained a decree against Nuffer Chunder Gossami and four others jointly, by which the debtors were directed to pay to the decree-holder Rs. 112. An application for execution was made on the 28th of February 1876, but without any satisfactory result. The application appears to have been removed from the file in March 1876. The next application for execution was made on the 20th of December 1878. Notice was served on the debtors on the 14th of Magh 1285 (29th January 1879), and returned on the 3rd of February 1879. On the very next day Indro Narain Gossami came in and objected to the execution, saying that he had paid Rs. 25 to the decree-holder, and that the decree-holder [789] had absolved him from all liability under the decree. As the fact of payment on the said arrangement had not been certified to the Court, it was not at liberty to enter into the matter in the execution proceedings. The decree-holder, however, was asked as to whether or not he had received the said Rs. 25 and whether he had released Indro Narain from liability under the decree. The decree-holder admitted having received the amount, but denied having expressed his intention of not taking out execution against him. There the matter ended. The order of the Court directing execution to issue against Indro Narain bears date the 25th of February 1879." Under this order the property of Indro Narain was sold and purchased by the decree-holder, Ishan Chunder Bandopadhyaya. The plaintiff then brought the present suit to have the sale set aside on the ground of fraud. The learned Judges of the lower Appellate Court having gone through the evidence said: "I agree with the Court below in finding that the decree-holder had released the plaintiff from all liability under the decree, and that therefore his conduct in taking out execution against him was fraudulent. The sale must, therefore, be set aside." The defendant appealed to the High Court on the grounds (1), that the alleged adjustment having been set up in the execution proceedings could not be again brought forward in a subsequent suit; (2), that the suit was barred by the provisions of s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code; and (3), that the alleged promise to release the plaintiff was a nudum pactum.

Baboo Rash Behary Ghose for the Appellant.

Baboo Nil Madhub Sen for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and WILSON, JJ.) was delivered by Prinsep, J.—It has been found by the lower Appellate Court that the defendant, who held a decree against the plaintiff and others, agreed to take, and did take, from plaintiff Rs. 25, as representing his liability under this joint decree, and at the same time undertook to abstain from further proceedings, but that notwithstanding he persisted in executing the decree and sold certain property belonging to the plaintiff.

The only question raised before us is, whether under the Code of Civil Procedure now in force, a suit will lie to set aside the [790] sale of plaintiff's property as having been held fraudulently, and in breach of the undertaking on receipt of the money paid out of Court in satisfaction of the liability of the plaintiff judgment-debtor under the decree, whether the law (s. 258) having placed it in the power of a judgment-debtor making such a payment to obtain the assistance of the Court, within a certain specified period, to require the decree-holder to certify that payment, any suit brought practically for the same purpose is not barred.

As an authority that the present suit will not lie, the case of Patankar v. Devji (I. L. R., 6 Bom., 146) has been cited. On the other hand, we find that in the case of Guni Khan v. Koonjo Behary Sein (3 C. L. R., 414), it has been held by a Division Bench of this Court that the law is unaltered by the Code of 1877, re-enacted by Act XIV of 1882. In respect of the matter now before us we find no material difference between s. 11, Act XXIII of 1861, now repealed, and s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure which has taken its place, and we observe that it was after full consideration of the effect of s. 11, Act XXIII of 1861, on a payment in satisfaction of a decree made out of Court that the judgment of a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Gunamune Dasi v. Prankishori Dasi (5 B. L. R., 223; 13 W. R., F. B., 69), was delivered.

Nor do we think that the terms of the last sentence of s. 258 have altered the law as thus expounded. No doubt it has been declared: that "no such payment or adjustment shall be recognized by any Court unless it has been certified" according to s. 258, but in our opinion this refers to any Court of execution, either the Court which itself passed the decree and is executing it, or any Court to which the decree may have been transferred for purposes of execution. It seems to us that whenever the Legislature has intended that any matter shall not be re-opened in any subsequent suit or proceeding, it has indicated that intention by more definite terms by either declaring that no subsequent suit shall lie, or that the particular order shall be final.

In this view on the findings of the lower Appellate Court, the plaintiff is entitled to a decree, and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Contract for sale of Government Securities—Time bargain—Contract Act, ss. 23 and 30—Evidence Act (1 of 1872), s. 92—Tender—Readiness and willingness.

The question whether an unambiguous written contract for the sale and purchase of Government paper is a contract or agreement by way of wager, must be decided on the expressed terms of the contract itself, and parol evidence is not admissible to vary or contradict those terms.

Where a contract for the sale and purchase of Government paper provides for the delivery of the paper on a subsequent date, it is not necessary, in order to sustain an action against the buyer for non-acceptance on the due date, that the plaintiff should have taken the Government paper contracted for to the place of business of the defendant and then and there made an actual tender of it.

THIS was a case stated for the opinion of the High Court under s. 7 of Act XXVI of 1864, by Baboo Koonjo Lal Banerjee, one of the Judges of the Calcutta Court of Small Causes. The case referred was as follows:—

"This was a suit brought by the plaintiffs to recover Rs. 1,000, after abandoning an excess of Rs. 93-12, being the amount of damages or loss sustained by him on a contract for the sale of Rs. 25,000 Government Securities. The contract is dated 1st July 1881, and delivery was to have been taken on the 1st or 2nd September following. The rate at which the paper was sold was Rs. 104-13 per cent. The rate on due date was Rs. 100-7 ; the difference or loss was therefore Rs. 4-6 per cent., the total amount being Rs. 1,093-12; the excess Rs. 93-12 has been abandoned in order to bring the case within the jurisdiction of this Court. The defendants admitted the contract, but denied damages, and a further objection was raised to the suit, viz., that the transaction was of a wagering character, and, as such contrary to public policy, and was therefore void under ss. 23* and 30 of the Indian Contract Act.†

[792] "It appeared from the evidence that the plaintiffs are up-country dealers in country produce; and that they occasionally sent up four or five bales of piece goods to the North-West Provinces; that about eight months ago they were induced by certain brokers of Government Securities to enter on the purchase and sale of Government Securities; and that the present one is one of their first transactions. The evidence further disclosed that the plaintiffs were at no time possessed of any Government Securities, but when the due date arrived, plaintiff Juggernaut went to his nephew Dann Mull, a broker in the firm of Peel Jacob and Company, and told him that he had sold Rs. 25,000 Government Paper to Ram Dyal and Chobnauth, the defendants, which would be due two days after, and that the broker in the transaction had promised to bring about a settlement, if not, he would have to tender the paper to the purchaser, and he asked Dann Mull to lend him Government Securities to that amount for the purpose of making a formal tender. No arrangement having been come to, the plaintiff Juggernaut, on due date, called on Dann Mull, who sent his durwan with him to Badul Chunder Dutt, with a request to accommodate him with Government securities of the value he wanted, which, if not used, would be returned to him. Juggernaut, accompanied by the durwan, went to Badul Chunder Dutt, who handed him the Government Securities required. Badul Chunder Dutt's evidence was that he did not sell the Government Papers to plaintiff; he therefore mentioned no price or rate to him, but merely lent the papers to him by way of accommodation.

"Without any endorsement he handed over the papers at 10 A.M. and got them back at 2 P.M. on the same date.

"The facts connected with the alleged tender of the papers proved in evidence were, that the plaintiff, accompanied by Dann Mull's durwan, called at the office of Mr. C. F. Pittar, an attorney, and got a letter from him addressed to the defendants, tendering the papers, and Dann Mull's durwan, Dew Sing, and the plaintiff, proceeded to the Broker's Exchange in New China Bazar, where they had expected to find the purchaser. They did not, however, find them there. The papers, however, were shown to one Tincoury, who sat in the same room, but who was [793] in no way connected with the buyers. The parties, thereupon, came back with the papers and at once returned them to their owner. All this happened on the 2nd September last, the due date. On the next day the plaintiffs caused an attorney's letter to be written to the defendants demanding the difference. The defendants in reply to this communication denied the tender altogether, and put forth a statement that the loss, if any, incurred by the plaintiffs had been fully made up by subsequent transactions between them, a statement which was not proved by evidence.

"The most important evidence in this case was that given by one of plaintiffs' own witnesses, Brindabun Chobay, which fully disclosed the real character of the transaction, and I have chiefly relied upon the testimony of this witness in taking the view which I have taken of the case, although he is father of the defendant Chohnauth. This witness is a respectable person and a broker of Government Securities of 33 years standing; his evidence was that about five to seven lacs worth of such transactions take place daily, in which what was chiefly looked for was the difference on the market value of the securities between the date of purchase and that of delivery, and that in most instances there is no bond fide intention of taking delivery of the paper, and that the present was one of those transactions. If the transactions in Government Securities go up to forty or fifty lacs, about four lacs would only change hands and that on the remainder of the transactions the parties are content with paying and receiving the difference, and that these transactions are like the bids upon the Government opium sale, popularly known as "Tazi Mandi," which is nothing more than gambling. That the inevitable consequence of these gambling transactions is, that a few persons become rich men while a very large number become boggars.

"I may add that, during my experience in this Court for the last twelve years, I have often found that men not possessed of any, or of only a very small amount of capital, recklessly enter into these dealings to the extent of lacs of rupees without possessing a single piece of Government Paper, and that it is very seldom that any paper is actually delivered or accepted, and all [794] that is done is that a certain amount of difference, amicably settled, is paid and accepted, and that when the parties are unable to come to terms the squabble has found its way into the Small Cause Court. The question which I have the honour to submit for the decision of the High Court has never been distinctly raised in any of these cases so far as I am aware, both parties having been willing to treat these contracts as ordinary commercial transactions. In this particular case, the intention clearly was not a bond fide sale, on one side, or a purchase on the other. The object was to speculate on the rise and fall of the market. Such being the real character of the transaction I have held it to be a gambling or wagering transaction, and as such opposed to public policy and have held, under s. 23 of the Contract Act, that it is a contract void in law. In expressing my opinion of this particular transaction, I ought to say that I do not desire to be understood as saying that there might not be a bond fide sale of shares or securities or goods with a condition for future delivery, even when the seller was not possessed of the article at the time the contract was made. Such a sale is distinctly recognised by s. 88 of the Contract Act. These cases, however, in my opinion, stand altogether on a different footing. In this case I found, as a fact, that there was no real intention to complete the purchase, but merely to seek the difference, and that there was no legal tender of the securities. Having regard to these facts I am of opinion that the case clearly comes within the scope of ss. 23 and 30 of the Indian Contract Act, and Grizewood v. Blane (11 C. B., 538). I have accordingly directed judgment to be entered for the defendants. But having regard to the importance of the point of law raised for the first time in this Court, I have made my judgment contingent upon the opinion of the Hon'ble Judges of the High Court upon the following questions, which I respectfully submit:—

"1st.—Whether upon the facts, as found by me, the contract was an agreement by way of wager, and, therefore, void within the meaning of s. 30, and contrary to public policy under s. 23 of the Indian Contract Act.

"2nd.—Whether the tender was a good legal tender."

[795] Mr. T. A. Apcar, for the plaintiff, contended that the contract was not a wagering contract, and referred to Grizewood v. Blane (11 C. B., 538); Thacker v. Hardy (L. R., 4 Q. B. D., 685); Hilton v. Eckersley (24 L. J., Q. B., 353); Ram Lall Thacoorsej Dass's case (4 Moore's I. A., 339).

Mr. Sale for the defendant cited Higginson v. Simpson (L. R. 2 C. P. D., 76).

The Opinion of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and WILSON, J.), was delivered by

Garth, C. J.—The contract in this case, as I understand, was in writing; there was nothing ambiguous about its terms, and it appeared upon the face of it to be a contract for the sale and purchase of Rs. 25,000 Government Securities, to be delivered on the 1st or 2nd of September following.

The Judge of the Small Cause Court appears to have gone into the question upon oral evidence, whether the contract between the parties was really what it purported to be, or whether it was merely a wagering contract for differences without any intention by either party to carry out the sale and purchase of the securities.

Upon this question the Judge has decided that it was a wagering contract, and as such void under s. 30 of the Indian Contract Act, or contrary to public policy under s. 23 of that Act; and the first question submitted to us by the reference is, whether he was right in so holding.

Now, if it was competent to the Judge to determine upon oral evidence what the nature of the contract was, I should consider that we had no right to question his finding upon the facts; but it seems to me that under s. 92 of the Evidence Act it was not competent for the defendant to go into oral evidence for the purpose of varying or contradicting the express terms of the contract. There was no ambiguity about it, and I do not see why evidence was admissible to vary or contradict its terms.

In the case of Grizewood v. Blane (11 C. B., 538), to which we have been [796] referred, the contract upon which the plaintiff declared was not for the sale and purchase of the share in question, but for differences in the price of the shares on a given day; and the contract was of such a nature upon the face of it that the jury might well find, as they did, that it was nothing more or less than a gambling transaction. It has since been doubted by very high authority, see Thacker v. Hardy (L. R., 4 Q. B. D., 685), whether the Judge and Jury in Grizewood v. Blane (11 C. B., 339) did not take an erroneous view of the transaction; but considering the view which they did take of it, it was undoubtedly a void contract under the English Gaming and Wagering Act.

And the same observation applies to another case which was cited in argument before us—Higginson v. Simpson (L. R., 2 C. P. D., 76). In that case the language of the contract was ambiguous and it was certainly consistent with its terms that it was intended to be a gaming transaction.

Then it was argued by Mr. Sale that, although evidence is not admissible to alter or vary the terms of a written contract, it is admissible for the purpose of showing illegality; but a contract by way of gaming and wagering is in this country, as in England, void and not illegal. It is expressly made void by s. 30 of the Act; and it therefore cannot, in my opinion, be said to be illegal as being contrary to public policy. I have also considerable doubt whether oral evidence is admissible for the purpose of showing that the contract is in its nature illegal. So long as there is no ambiguity about it, the question whether it is illegal or not depends, as it seems to me, upon the terms of the contract itself.

I think, therefore, that evidence was not admissible for the purpose of varying the terms of the contract, and that the first question which is referred to us should be answered in the negative.

The second question is apparently founded on some misapprehension. It seems to have been taken for granted in the Court below, that a legal tender of the securities was absolutely [797] necessary; but this was not so. If the plaintiff was ready and willing to perform his part of the contract, that is to say, if he was in a position to transfer the securities on the 2nd of September, and did his best to inform the defendant by going to his place of business, that he was so, that would be sufficient, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to constitute readiness and willingness.

If the plaintiff had the stock in his possession, as he says he had, there would seem every reason to suppose that he would be prepared to carry out the transaction.

No man, one would think, would ordinarily find any difficulty in completing such a lucrative bargain.

As this point however has not been decided by the Court below, the case, must go back for that purpose.

The costs in this Court will abide the result of the judgment of the Court below.

[On appeal from the High Court at Fort William in Bengal.]

Costs—Set-off of costs ordered on the disposal of a preliminary point against costs awarded at the final disposal of the suit—Costs of party successful appeal.

It is not the usual practice, when costs of an interlocutory proceeding have been disposed of, to consider that an award of the general costs of the suit interferes with the order as to the partial costs. A prior decree having given the costs incurred on the disposal of a preliminary point to the party successfully raising it, a later decree without expressly referring to the former, gave the costs of the suit, generally, to the opposite side. Held, that the costs due under the prior decree should be set off against those due under the later.

Although an appellant only partly succeeded in his appeal, the whole of his claim having been opposed in the Courts below on an untenable ground, Held, that there was no reason for departing from the general rule that the defeated party should pay the costs.

[798] APPEAL from a decree of a Divisional Bench of the High Court (24th February 1879), reversing a decree of the Judge of the Shahabad District (3rd August 1878).

A suit (for land) dismissed by the Subordinate Judge of the Shahabad district, upon the defence of limitation, was remanded (26 April 1869) for hearing on the merits; and it was ordered in the same decree that the defendants, respondents, should pay to the plaintiff, appellant, a certain sum for costs, with the costs incurred in the lower Court. The result of the hearing having been a decree in favour of the plaintiff as to part only of his claim, with proportionate costs to each party, another remand was obtained from the High Court, on this occasion to the District Judge, who also decreed partly in favour of the plaintiff, directing that each party should recover costs from the other in proportion to the success of each. To that decree was annexed a schedule of costs, including the costs recoverable by the plaintiff under the High Court's decree of 26th April 1869. The defendants then appealed successfully to the High Court, and on the 10th January 1874 the High Court reversed the decree of the District Judge, ordering that the plaintiff, then respondent, should pay to the defendants, then appellants, a certain sum for costs, and also costs incurred in the lower Court. Upon a further appeal to Her Majesty in Council, although the decree of 1874 was in part modified, this order for costs was in effect confirmed; the order in Council setting forth the amount of the costs of the appeal.

On the defendants' petition for exemption as to all costs, the plaintiff objected that he was entitled to set-off the sum decreed to him by the High Court on the 26th April 1869; and by the District Judge of Shahabad, Mr. A. C. Brett, this set-off was allowed. But the High Court (AINSLIE and BROUGHTON, JJ.), held that the decree of 1874 had dealt with the whole question of costs in the suit as an open one; and on the construction of that decree, held that costs generally, and in the whole suit, had been given to the defendants. They, therefore, disallowed the set-off.

The present appeal was accordingly proffered.

[799] Mr. J. F. Leith, Q. C., and Mr. R. V. Doyne, appeared for the Appellant.

Mr. C. W. Arathoon for the Respondents.

The argument for the appellant traced the orders as to costs throughout the present litigation, and it was contended that the order of 26th April 1869 never having been reversed, required that effect should be given to it. Reference was made to s. 360 of Act VIII of 1859, the Code of Civil Procedure in force in 1869.

For the respondents reliance was placed on what had been done, and the orders made in the suit on and since the 10th June 1874. The construction placed on the decree of 1874 by the judgment now under appeal was correct.

Mr. J. F. Leith, Q. C., replied.

Their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by

Sir A. Hobhouse.—In this case there have been changes of parties, as frequently happens when a litigation extends over many years; but they have made no difference to the present question, and it will be convenient to speak of the appellant and respondents as if there was no change. So speaking of them, the appellant has been ordered to pay to the respondents the costs of a litigation with them. He now seeks to set-off against those costs the costs of a prior part of the same litigation which were awarded to him; and the question is whether his right to those prior costs has been displaced by a subsequent decree in the later part of the litigation. In the Court below the appellant was the plaintiff and the respondents were the defendants. The suit was for the recovery of certain lands; and the respondents set up a defence of the law of limitation. That issue was decided in their favour by the Subordinate Judge on the 31st July 1868, and in consequence the appellant's suit was dismissed. An appeal was presented to the High Court, who delivered judgment thereon on the 26th of April 1869. By their decree they reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge, disallowed the defence of limitation, and ordered that the respondents should pay to the appellant the sum of Rs. 2,499-13-5, being the amount of costs incurred by [800] him in the High Court with interest; and further ordered that the respondents should pay to the appellant the costs incurred by him in the lower Court with interest. With that order the suit was remanded. The litigation was then carried on with various fortune, and came up twice to the High Court. On the second occasion the High Court gave a final decree in favour of the respondents. That decree was pronounced upon the 10th June 1874, when the appellant's suit was dismissed, and he was ordered to pay the costs of the suit generally. The decree has been, so far as regards costs, affirmed by Her Majesty in Council; but the construction and effect of it is not in any way altered by that affirmation.

The respondents applied to the Subordinate Court for execution for their costs, and the appellant then claimed to set-off against the costs claimed by the respondents the costs which were due under the decree of the 26th April 1869. It may be well to mention that an application had been made by the appellant for payment of those costs soon after they were awarded to him, but it appears to have been thought proper that the question should stand over until the final determination of the suit. The amounts claimed for costs by the appellant were, first, the sum found by the High Court itself on the 26th April 1869 to be due for expenses in that Court; and, secondly, an amount of Rs. 5,806 odd, which were found by the Subordinate Court on a previous occasion to be due in respect of the regular suit, as it is called, disposed of by the Court of the Subordinate Judge on the 31st July 1868. Mr. Brett, the Judge of Shahabad, allowed those amounts to be set-off by the appellant against the claim of the respondents, and he made an order to that effect on the 3rd August 1878. The respondents presented an appeal to the High Court, and on the 24th February 1879 the High Court reversed the order of the Subordinate Judge, and disallowed the claim of the appellant to set-off the costs awarded to him in the decree of the 26th April 1869; and they gave to the respondents the costs of that appeal.

The ground taken by the High Court seems to be that the decree made on the 10th June 1874, giving the whole costs of the suit, overrode the decree of the 26th April 1869, which gives the costs [801] of a portion of the suit in which the respondents had failed. Their Lordships think that there is no ground for so construing the decree of 1874. The question of costs awarded by the decree of April 1869 was not before the Court in 1874 ; nor is it the usual practice, when costs of an interlocutory proceeding have been disposed of, to consider that an award of the general costs of the suit interferes with the order disposing of those partial costs. If there were any mistake in the prior order it ought to have been the subject of some review or rehearing, in which the Court should have had the subject brought to its mind. That was not the case, and their Lordships consider that it is neither the intention nor the effect of the decree of the 10th June 1874 to interfere with the costs awarded by the order of the 26th April 1869.

It has been mentioned that there were two amounts claimed by the appellant under the decree of 1869. With regard to the first, the costs incurred in the High Court on the appeal decided in 1869, their Lordships considered that the appellant is entitled to set those off against the costs now claimable by the respondents.

With regard to the second amount, questions arise as to the items composing it. The first of those items, and the most considerable of them, is a sum of Rs. 3,245, which is the Court-fee. The Court-fee applies not only to the hearing in 1869 but to the whole of the litigation ; and, inasmuch as the general costs of the suit are awarded to the respondents, it would be improper that they should have to pay the Court-fee on account of their failure in the first stage of the suit.

The next item is a sum of Rs. 2,490 for pleader's fee ; and it may be that a portion of that should be referred to the general costs of the suit, and not to the costs of the hearing of 1869. Their Lordships are not in a position to say how that matter is.

Under those circumstances their Lordships conceive that the proper order to be made will be : To discharge the order of the 24th February 1879 ; to declare that the appellant is entitled to the costs properly recoverable under the decree of April 1869 ; to declare that those costs consist of the sum of Rs. 2,499-13-5 mentioned in the decree of April 1869, and also such costs in the Court below as were occasioned by the defence of the law of limitation, and the costs of the trial and hearing [802] thereon, and of the decree of the 31st July 1868 ; that it be referred to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Shahabad to assess the last-mentioned costs upon that footing ; and that the cause be remitted with a declaration that the costs when so assessed, together with the said sum of Rs. 2,499-13-5, are to be set off against the costs found due to the respondents. Interest should be charged as ordered by the decree of the 26th April 1869.

Their Lordships will make an humble recommendation to Her Majesty to that effect.

With regard to the costs of these latter proceedings, their Lordships have had considerable doubt, because the appellant does not wholly succeed ; but having regard to the fact that the whole of the appellant's claim was opposed in the Court below upon a ground which their Lordships think entirely wrong, they do not see sufficient reason for departing from the sound general rule that the party who is defeated in the controversy that is raised shall pay the costs.

They, therefore, think it right that the appellant should have the costs of this appeal, and also the costs in the High Court.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Mohiny Mohun Das.....Plaintiff

Krishno Kishore Dutt and others.....Defendants.*

Onus probandi --Suit for possession of land—Presumption of possession and ownership.

If, in a suit for possession of land which was covered with water more than twelve years before the institution of the suit, the plaintiff proves that he exercised acts of ownership, as by letting out the julkur to [803] tenants, that is prima facie evidence of possession and ownership, and unless the defendant can make out a twelve-years' statutory title by adverse possession, the plaintiff's possession must be presumed to have continued, and it is not necessary for him to show a possession by acts of ownership within the twelve-years.

Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose and Baboo Lal Mohun Das for the Appellant.

Baboo Guru Das Bannerjee and Baboo Bykanto Nath Das for the Respondents.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of Garth, C.J. --In this case the Subordinate Judge has unfortunately taken an erroneous view of the law.

The subject of the dispute was a piece of land between two estates. It is admitted that one of these estates belonged to the plaintiff, and the other to the defendants. The question was, to which of the two the piece of land in question belonged.

Between these two estates there was a baor or water channel; and it seems to have been found by the Courts below that the land in question was formed by the silting up of this baor. Evidence was called on both sides to show at what time the silting up took place, or in other words, at what time the land in question, which was originally covered with water, became dry.

Upon that point the Subordinate Judge appears to have believed the defendants' witnesses in preference to those of the plaintiff. The defendants' witnesses said that the land became dry more than twelve years before suit; and the plaintiff's witnesses said that it became dry within twelve years before suit. It was upon the point of limitation that this evidence was offered.

Then, the only evidence adduced on either side as to the possession of the land during the time that it was covered with water, was given by the plaintiff. His witnesses proved that he had let out the julkur, or right of fishing in the water, which then covered the land in question, to certain tenants; and that under that letting they had exercised the right of fishing; and so far as appears this evidence was not contradicted.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 698 of 1881, against the decree of Baboo Nobin Chunder Ganguli, Second Subordinate Judge of Furreedpore, dated the 31st January 1881, reversing the decree of Baboo Rosik Chunder Roy, Second Munsif of Moolputgunge, dated the 11th March 1880.

Now, as regards these two points, namely, that of possession [804] and that of limitation, the Subordinate Judge has dealt with the case in this way.

As to the question of possession, he finds, as I understand him, that there is no evidence to show that the land ever belonged to the plaintiff; because he says: "I cannot find that the land below the water of the baor belonged to the plaintiff, merely because he was in possession of the water by letting it out to tenants as julkur. This fact may show that he had an interest in the julkur superior to that of those tenants, or that he was the proprietor of the julkur; but this fact I do not consider sufficient for the purpose of finding that the land covered by water belongs to him. I cannot, therefore, find that the land belongs to the plaintiff."

Now, if the plaintiff really did give reliable evidence that he had let out the julkur to tenants, and that they under that letting had exercised the right of fishing there, I think that was clearly evidence, and strong evidence too, that the land covered by the water, over which the right of fishing was enjoyed, belonged to the plaintiff.

Prima facie, in the case of land covered by water, the water belongs to the person to whom the land belongs; cujus est solum, ejus est usque ad cælum. The owner of land is entitled, prima facie, to everything either over or under it; and the ordinary, if not the very best means, of proving the ownership of land covered by water, is to show that rights of fishing have been exercised in and over the water. There are few other means of proving ownership over such land, except perhaps by working minerals, or carrying on other works below the surface of the soil.

And if the plaintiff in this instance proved such acts of ownership by fishing, they would clearly be prima facie evidence of his possession and ownership unless it could be shown that his taking the fish was referable to some other right or title.

And yet I understand the Subordinate Judge to say: "Assuming what the plaintiff's witnesses say with regard to these acts of ownership to be true, I consider it no evidence of possession at all, because it may be referable to some other right." He does not say to what right, nor is it even suggested that the plaintiff had any other right which would account for his ownership of the fishery.

[805] I think, therefore, that the Subordinate Judge in this respect was clearly wrong. Unless there is some good reason for disbelieving the plaintiff's evidence, or unless it can be shown that these acts of ownership, which were exercised by the plaintiff in the julkur, are referable to some other right than the ownership of the soil itself, the Subordinate Judge was bound to give full and proper effect to the plaintiff's evidence.

But then the Subordinate Judge says: "Even assuming that I were to consider these acts of ownership as proving that the land covered by water belonged to the plaintiff, he is nevertheless barred by limitation; because he has not shown that the land which was covered with water has silted up and become dry within twelve years before suit; and it is therefore not shown that he has exercised any acts of ownership over the land within the twelve years."

Upon this point also I consider that the Subordinate Judge has taken a wrong view. In a case decided by a Full Bench of this Court only a few days ago Mahomed Ali Khan v. Kajah Abdul Hunny (ante p. 744), the law upon this subject has been laid down very clearly.

In that case the question arose (with reference to the law of limitation), how far it is necessary for the plaintiff, in cases of this kind, to prove a possession by acts of ownership within twelve years before suit. There is no doubt that he is bound to satisfy the Court that he has had a possession, and that he has lost that possession within the 12 years. The question is, how far it is necessary for him to prove that possession by positive acts of ownership, or how far the Court may presume in his favour from the fact of previous title and possession.

This is a question upon which some difference of opinion has prevailed in this Court, but which is now, I trust, satisfactorily settled. I regret that I was obliged to differ to some extent from my learned brothers of the Full Bench, but the difference is not one which affects the present suit. In such a case as this we were all agreed that possession ought to be presumed in favour of the plaintiff.

[806] The principle laid down in that case by my learned brothers is as follows :—I will read from their judgment :

"The true rule appears to us to be this, that where land has been shown to have been in a condition unfitting it for actual enjoyment in the usual modes—at such a time and under such circumstances that that state naturally would, probably did, continue, till within twelve years before suit, it may properly be presumed that it did so continue, and that the plaintiff's possession continued also, until the contrary is shown. This presumption seems to us to be reasonable in itself, and in accordance with the legal principles now embodied in s. 114 of the Evidence Act."

Now, applying that rule to the present case, it may be that, so long as the land was covered by water, the plaintiff might, as, in fact, he did prove acts of ownership over it by the exercise of the right of fishing.

But it was proved to the satisfaction of the Subordinate Judge that previous to the twelve years the land emerged from the water, that is, the baor silted up, and from that time it, of course, became impossible for the plaintiff to prove acts of ownership over it by fishing.

Then it seems to have been found by the Munsif—and there is nothing to the contrary found by the Subordinate Judge—that the land was waste, and did not become fit for cultivation until within six or seven years before suit.

This is, therefore, just one of the cases which are alluded to in the Full Bench judgment, and it discloses almost the same state of things which occurred in the case of Radha Gobind Roy v. Inglis (7 C. L. R., 364), decided by the Privy Council. In that case the land in question had formerly been covered by a bheel or lake, and after the bheel became dry the defendants took possession of it. The plaintiff proved, prima facie, his title to the bheel and possession of it in one of his ancestors, but he gave no proof of acts of ownership within the twelve years before suit. It did not appear clearly when the bheel became dry, and the defendants failed to prove possession of the land for twelve years before suit. Under these circumstances the Privy Council held that, as the plaintiff had proved a title to, and possession of, the bheel, his possession [807] must be presumed to have continued, unless the defendant could make out a twelve years' statutory title by adverse possession.

Unfortunately in this case the Subordinate Judge has taken a view (which my brother FIELD tells me he has erroneously taken in other similar cases), that no such presumption can be made in favour of the plaintiff, but that he must show a possession by acts of ownership within the twelve years.

Here, again, therefore he is wrong. If it was shown that the plaintiff exercised acts of ownership over the land when covered by water, and that when the land became dry it was in such a state that it would be very difficult, if not impossible, to prove any acts of ownership over it, the Court might, and ought to, presume (according to the rule laid down in the Full Bench case), that the plaintiff's possession continued until the contrary was shown.

I think, therefore, that the case should be remanded to the Court below to be considered, with due regard to the law laid down by this Court.

The costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court will abide the result.

Field, J.— I am of the same opinion on both points.

With reference to the question of limitation I shall merely refer to one more case in addition to those quoted by the very learned Chief Justice, that is the case of Rao Karan Singh v. Raja Bakar Ali Khan (L.R. 9 I.A., 99).

Then, with reference to the evidence as to the enjoyment of the julkur being evidence of title, I desire to add that, under the special circumstances of this particular case, it appears to me that the evidence of possession and enjoyment of the julkur ought, if believed and un rebutted, to be taken to be good evidence of the title to the land. I say under the special circumstances of this particular case, because there are cases in this country in which it might be impossible to consider evidence of the ownership and enjoyment of a julkur to be evidence of the title to the land covered by the water, for example, the case of a julkur in a deep and navigable river. In the present case, the water which forms the julkur is a small piece of water in a small estate. The [808] enjoyment of that julkur would presumably belong to the owner of the estate, unless he had leased it out to tenants. It would follow that if the owner of the estate could show that he had enjoyed the julkur, this would be good evidence that the land under the julkur belonged to him, that is, in the absence of any suggestion, which has not been made in this case, that this enjoyment of the julkur was referable to a lease of an incorporeal right taken from a third party.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 19th February, 1883.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY.

MusyatullaDefendant

Noorzahan.....Plaintiff.*

Landlord and tenant—Ejectment—Right of occupancy—Forfeiture—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 52.

The mere omission to pay rent for five years does not of itself amount to forfeiture of a ryot's right of occupancy, and will not be sufficient to sustain an action by the landlord for the recovery of the ryot's holding.

A ryot having a right of occupancy cannot be legally ejected, unless under an order regularly obtained under s. 52 of the Rent Law, that is, under a decree for arrears of rent unsatisfied within fifteen days from the passing of the decree.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 661 of 1882, against the decree of F. Comley, Esq., Judge of Purnea, dated the 21st January 1882, affirming the decree of Baboo Lall Bohary Dey, Munsif of Kissengunge, dated the 19th September 1881.

THIS was a suit for ejectment and khas possession. It was found as a fact that in 1882 (1875-76) the defendant had a right of occupancy in the lands in dispute; that he paid no rent for the years 1283, 1284, 1285, or 1286; and that a notice to quit had been served upon the defendant on the 28th of Pous 1286 (11th January 1880), requiring him to give up possession by the end of Cheyt 1286 (i.e., before the 12th of April 1880). The Court of First Instance gave the plaintiff a decree on the authority of Hem Nath Dut v. Ashgur Sirdar (I.L. R., 4 Cal., 894), and this decree was affirmed on appeal. The defendant appealed to the High Court on the following grounds, amongst others:—

That under s. 22 Beng. Act VIII of 1869, the learned Judge below appears to have erred in holding that your petitioner's [809] right of occupancy was terminated by the notice to quit, alleged to have been served upon your petitioner.

(2) That the right of occupancy once acquired cannot be lost for the omission to pay rent for some years.

(3) That the plaintiff having not brought his suit under s. 52, Beng. Act VIII of 1869, upon the ground of your petitioner's omission to pay rent, the lower Appellate Court was wrong in law in relying upon it for deciding the case in favour of the plaintiff.

Mr. Twidale for the Appellant.

Baboo Saligram Singh for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and O'KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by Prinsep, J.—The plaintiff sues to eject the defendant, stating that he has no occupancy rights, and that notice to quit has been regularly served on him.

It has been found by the lower Appellate Court that the defendant and his father have been actual cultivators for many years, and that the defendant in 1282 had acquired rights of occupancy; but the District Judge goes on to find that inasmuch as, on the defendant's own admission, he has paid no rent to any one for five years, he has lost those rights of occupancy, and consequently is liable to be dispossessed after notice.

It has been settled by the judgment of Division Bench of this Court in the case of Duli Chand v. Rajkissore (ante, p. 88: 11 C. L. R., 326), and we agree in that judgment, that a ryot having a right of occupancy cannot be legally ejected unless under an order regularly obtained under s. 52 of the Rent Law, that is to say, under a decree for arrears of rent unsatisfied within fifteen days from the date on which it was delivered. The suit in its present form therefore is bad and must fail.

We think it necessary also to point out to the District Judge that even if a ryot who has acquired a right of occupancy fails to pay rent for five years, he does not necessarily forfeit that right unless it can be proved that he has abandoned the land, [810] or a decree for ejectment, which would be operative under s. 52, has been passed against him.

The decrees of the lower Courts will be set aside, and the suit dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 2nd March, 1883.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY.

Sharat Chunder Ghose and others.....Plaintiffs

Kartik Chunder Mitter and anotherDefendants.*

Suit by minor—Infant—Minor—Compromise of suit—Leave of Court.

Where a compromise of a suit is entered into on behalf of an infant defendant, the approval of the Court to such compromise must be express, and will not be inferred from the subsequent passing of a decree in terms of such compromise. Without such approval, the compromise will not bind the infant, and will be set aside at his instance.

Rajagopal Takkaya Naiker v. Subramanya Ayyar (1. L. R., 3 Mad., 103), cited and followed.

THE facts of this case are as follows:—Some time previously to the year 1860 one Raj Kristo Bose died, leaving him surviving one son, Khetter Nath Ghose, and one daughter, Modhumoti Dasseo. Khetter Nath died in 1861, and was succeeded by his widow and heiress Showrobini, who died in 1875. The plaintiffs, are the three sons of Modhumoti Dasseo. On the 25th of November 1873 Showrobini executed a bond in favour of the defendant Kartik Chunder Mitter for Rs. 1,500, who, on the 10th of March 1877, filed a suit for the recovery of the amount of the bond and interest—in all, Rs. 2,388, against Modhumoti as guardian of the plaintiffs, who had succeeded to the estate of Khetter Nath on the death of Sowrobini in 1875. (Modhumoti, it should be mentioned, had been appointed guardian of the minors by the Judge of the District Court under the provisions of Act XI. of 1858). On the 13th of March 1877, Modhumoti's pleader filed a deed of com-[811]promise, by which Modhumoti agreed to pay in full satisfaction of Kartik Chunder Mitter's claim a sum of Rs. 1,600, payable in three instalments, and a decree was passed in accordance with the terms of this deed. The present suit was filed by the plaintiffs to have it declared that that decree was not binding on the plaintiffs nor on the estate inherited by them from their uncle Khetter Nath.

On the merits the Subordinate Judge fixed the following issues:—(1), whether the deed of compromise on which the decree was founded was filed bona fide on behalf of plaintiffs' mother and with her permission; and, if so, whether it was for the benefit of the minors; (2), whether Showrobini contracted the debt for the benefit of Khetter Nath's estate, and whether she was legally competent to do so; (3), whether the act of Showrobini, who had a life interest, is binding on the reversioners the plaintiffs; (4), whether the plaintiffs are entitled to the relief sought for, namely, a declaration to set aside the decree. The Subordinate Judge found all the issues in the plaintiffs' favour, and he decreed the suit with costs. On appeal the District Judge reversed the Subordinate Judge's finding on the first issue, and dismissed the suit, citing Lekraj Ray v. Mahtab Chand (10 B. L. R., 35 : 14 Moore's I. A., 393). The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 869 of 1882 against the decree, of T. Smith, Esq., Judge of East Burdwan, dated the 1st March 1882, reversing the decree of Baboo Bhupotty Roy, Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 27th December 1880.

Baboo Bhowany Churn Dutt and Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose for the Appellants.

Baboo Tarruck Nath Sen and Baboo Rashbehary Ghose for the Respondents.

Prinsep, J.—On the 10th of March 1877 Kartik Chunder Mitter brought a suit against the present plaintiffs, as represented by their mother and guardian Modhumoti Dasse, to recover a sum of money said to have been borrowed by Showrobini, a Hindu widow then in possession of the estate, which has since passed from her hands. Three days later, and before any proceedings had been taken on the plaint to that suit, in fact before even summonses had been issued, Modhumoti's pleader filed a petition [812] of ekbaljamah, consenting to a decree in favour of Kartik Chunder for a portion of the amount sued for. A few days later a decree was passed in accordance with this petition. One of the three minor defendants in that case has now attained majority, and for himself, and also on behalf of his minor brothers, sues to get rid of the effect of that decree in consequence of its having been put into execution against him by the attachment of some of his property.

The District Judge on appeal has merely considered the manner in which the compromise was effected in which the decree was passed. On the facts, which have been stated, and also because he considered that the minors were sufficiently advised by their maternal uncle Brojendro Ghose and their relative Bishembur Bose, the District Judge has held that the decree was binding against them.

Whatever may have been the practice of our Courts regarding their duty in accepting compromises on behalf of minors in pending suits, and in embodying them in the terms of the decree, it is quite clear to us that since July 1871, that is to say since the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Abdul Ali v. Mozuffer Hossem Chowdhry (16 W. R., P. C., 22), the procedure of our Courts should have been guided by the rule laid down by their Lordships in that case. Their Lordships state that, "if there really had been an honest compromise made, the practice of the Court is quite plain as to how that compromise ought to have been carried out. It ought to have been carried out by proper deeds and filed in Court, particularly where infants were concerned, so as to have had the assent of the Court at the time instead of its being totally concealed from them." The rule laid down in that case has since been adopted by the legislature in enacting s. 462 of the present Code of Civil Procedure. It has been laid down by the Madras High Court in Rajagopaul Takkaya Naiker v. Subramanya Ayyar (I. L. R., 3 Mad., 103), that the approval of the Court of a compromise thus effected must be express, and cannot be inferred from the subsequent passing of a decree in accordance with the terms of the compromise. We agree with that judgment [813] and in applying it to the present case we think that the decree of the 27th March 1877 is inoperative as against the plaintiffs in the present case. The parties consequently will be placed in the position that they occupied before that decree was passed, but with the consent of the pleader for the respondents, we think that the liability of the plaintiffs to the debt incurred by Showrobini, which can be conveniently tried in the present suit on the second and third issues, should be so tried. Those issues have been determined by the Court of First Instance, and therefore it remains for the lower Appellate Court to come to a distinct finding on them. For this purpose we direct that the case be remanded to the lower Appellate Court for trial on its merits.* We would add that, in the event of the debt being found binding on the present plaintiffs, they will be liable for the whole amount, and not merely for the amount stipulated on their behalf in the compromise.

Costs will abide the result.

Case remanded.

Bacharam Mundul.....Defendant

Peary Mohun Banerjee.....Plaintiff.*

Onus probandi—Resumption, Suit for— Lakheraj— Rent-free lands—Landlord and Tenant.

In suits for the resumption of lands alleged by the defendant to be lakheraj, the burden of proof is in the first instance on the plaintiff to show that the lands are mal. The fact that the defendant is a tenant of the plaintiff is a matter to be taken into consideration by the Court in determining whether, on the facts of the case, the plaintiff has made out a prima facie case ; but unless the Court finds that the plaintiff has made out a prima facie case, judgment should be given for the defendant.

ITurryhur Mukhopadhyaya v. Madhub Chunder Baboo (8 B. L. R., 566 ; 14 Moore's I. A., 153) ; Akbar Ali v. Bhy Ea Lall Jha (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 666) ; and Neraj Bundopadhyaya v. Kali Prosunno Ghose (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 543) cited.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 708 of 1882, against the decree of Baboo Promotho Nath Mukerjee, Subordinate Judge of Burdwan, dated the 27th March 1882, reversing the decree of Baboo Chunder Coomar Das, Munsif of Boodbood, dated the 4th January 1881.

[814] IN this case, the plaintiff who is the talukdar of mouzah Bhuri, pergunah Bhuga, in the district of Burdwan, sued one Bacharam Mundul, and nine others, named Pal. These latter defendants had been holders of a jote within the plaintiff's taluk, which jote yielded a jama of Rs. 30-5-6½, and was registered in the name of one Manikram Pal, deceased. In 1879 the plaintiff obtained a decree for rent against all the Pal defendants. In execution of that decree he attached the tenure under s. 59 of the Rent Law, and gave a schedule of all the lands comprised in the jote. The defendant Bacharam preferred a claim to three of those plots, alleging that they were lakheraj lands, and that he had purchased them as such from five of the Pal defendants, the owners thereof. This claim was allowed on the 17th of January 1880; and on the 1st of July 1880, the plaintiff brought the present suit for a declaration that the lands were not lakheraj but were comprised in the tenure registered in the name of Manikram Pal; and for possession. Bacharam Mundul's defence was that the lands claimed are lakheraj, and that he is in possession of the same.

The Court of First Instance found that each party had failed to prove the case set up by him, and, throwing the onus on the plaintiff, dismissed the suit with costs. On appeal the Subordinate Judge said: "The evidence on both sides has been held by the lower Court to be equally unsatisfactory. The decision of the case therefore hinges on the question of onus. It seems to me the lower Court has wrongly placed the onus on the plaintiff under the rulings of the High Court Akbar Ali v. Bhy Ea Lall Jha (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 666); Newaj Bundopadhyaya v. Kali Prasunno Ghose (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 543).

The Subordinate Judge then referred to Sheeb Narain Roy v. Chidam Doss Byrager (6 W. R. (Act X), 45); Gunqadhur Singh v. Bimola Dossee (5 W. R., (Act X), 37); Ram Narain Singh v. Bistoo Thakoor (15 W. R., 299); Khoshed Ali v. Dhoondharee Singh (20 W. R., 457), which had been cited for the defendant, and, holding that the onus lay upon the defendant to prove his lakheraj title, reversed the judgment of the Court of First Instance [815] and gave the plaintiff a decree. The defendant appealed to the High Court.

Bahoo Kaly Churn Banerjee for the Appellant.

Bahoo Rash Behary Ghose for the Respondent.

Prinsep, J. The plaintiff in this case sued to recover possession of certain lands as mal, on the ground that his title had been impugned by an adverse order in the case No. 1654 of 1879. The defendants denied that the lands were mal, and claimed them as their rent-free holding.

The first Court dismissed the suit. On appeal the Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the onus of proving that the land was lakheraj lay upon the defendants, and finding that they had not proved it to be so, he decreed the claim. The findings of fact upon which his decision is based are—first, that the defendants are the plaintiff's tenants in respect of certain mal lands; and, second, that the lands which are alleged to be lakheraj, and which form the subject of this suit, are within the ambit of the plaintiff's zamindari. In the case of Hurryhm Mukhopadhyaya v. Madhub Chunder Baboo (8 B. L. R., 566; 14 Moore's L. A., 153), their Lordships of the Privy Council declared that in suits for the resumption of lands alleged to be held as lakheraj the onus lies on the plaintiff. They said: "The only other point to be decided on this appeal is, whether there is any peculiarity in this case, which ought to take it out of the general rule. Their Lordships are of opinion that there is not. Mr. Doyne argued that the defendants had admitted that the lands in question, with the exception of the small quantity no longer claimed, were within the appellant's estate; but such an admission is obviously not sufficient to meet the burthen of proof thrown upon the plaintiff. It was at most an admission that the lands were within the ambit of the estate, not that they had ever been mal lands—in fact the defendants strenuously asserted the contrary. The appellant, therefore, having failed to give any evidence on the second trial in support of his amended plaint, [816] the decree dismissing his suit was right." In this case, as in that, the lands are within the ambit of the plaintiff's zamindari, and as there, so here, the defendants assert that the lands are lakheraj. The Privy Council decision just quoted is binding on this Court, and has been followed by the decisions in Arjunnessa v. Peary Mohun Mookerjee (1. L. R., 1 Cal., 378), and Koylash Bashing Dossee v. Cocool Moni Dossee (1. L. R., 8 Cal., 230).

It has, however, been argued before us that where a tenant holds lands in a zamindari, if he claims any other lands as lakheraj, the onus is shifted from the plaintiff to the defendant, and in support of his contention two cases have been brought to our notice. The first is the case of Akbar Ali v. Bhy Ra Lall Jha (1. L. R., 6 Cal., 666). In that case if we take certain paragraphs by themselves, it certainly would appear that something in the nature of the proposition now contended for was laid down, but when we turn to the decision of the Chief Justice Sir RICHARD CARTH, we find in his statement of the facts that the land in dispute was included within the ambit of the mal land held by the defendant, and he came to the conclusion that under the whole circumstances of the case the onus was on the defendant. The next case cited is that of Neraj Bundopadhya v. Kali Prasanno Ghose (1. L. R., 6 Cal., 543) reported in 8 C. L. R., p. 7. There the Judges laid down that the onus lay upon the defendants; but no doubt the decision turned on the special facts of the case, and these are not given in the report.

In neither of these cases was the judgment of the Privy Council, to which we have already referred, or the subsequent case which followed it Arjunnessa v. Peary Mohun Mookerjee (1. L. R., 1 Cal., 378) quoted. We do not understand these cases to decide that if in an estate a man held one piece of land in one corner and another piece in another corner, because he paid rent for the former the onus would lie on him to prove his lakheraj title to the latter. Indeed this would be distinctly opposed to the view laid down by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. What their Lordships held was that the onus lay on the plaintiff, and he must prove that the land in dispute was part of the mal land of his estate, and that he could do, either by proof of receipt of rent or that its proceeds were taken into account at the permanent settlement, or by any other sufficient means. And they distinctly declared that, unless plaintiff could make out a prima facie case, that is a case in which he would be entitled to a decree if the defendant did not produce evidence, his suit should be dismissed.

In the present case it appears from the schedule to the plaint that the land in dispute is surrounded by other lands held by the defendants for which rent is paid. This is a matter which should be taken into consideration in dealing with the case. If it be true, as stated in the plaint, that the land is so surrounded by ryotti lands of the defendants, it is some evidence to go before a jury or Judge to show that the land forms part of the tenure of the defendants, and is not their lakheraj holding. But no decree can be passed adversely to the defendants on it, unless the Judge is of opinion that it establishes a prima facie case of the nature already described.

The case will be remanded to the Subordinate Judge in order that he may decide whether the land belongs to the tenure of the defendants, or, as is asserted by them, is their lakheraj holding.

Costs will abide the result.

Case remanded.

The 9th March, 1883.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY.

Upendra Narain Myti.....Plaintiff

Gopee Nath Bera and others.....Defendants.*

Hindu widow—Reversioner—Declaratory decree—Waste by Hindu widow Compromise by Hindu widow—setting aside compromise—Joint family—separation—Partial separation.

Where the next reversioner after a Hindu widow sues, during the lifetime of the widow, for a declaration that a compromise made by her is not binding on him, it is no sufficient ground for refusing the declaration that the plaintiff may not succeed for many years to the possession of the property, or that some of the property is of a perishable nature.

The separation of one member of a joint Hindu family does not necessarily create [818] a separation between the other members nor cause the general disruption of the family.

Radha Churn Dass v. Kripa Sindhu Dass (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 474) dissented from.

IN this case the judgment appealed from is as follows :—

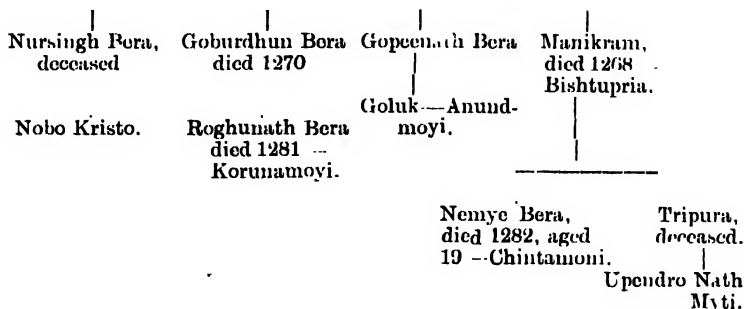

The plaintiff brought a suit for declaration under Act I of 1877 to declare a certain deed of compromise executed by the defendants void as regards his rights as reversionary heir. He obtained a decree, against which the defendant has appealed. It appears that Madhub Bera died leaving four sons, who lived together as an undivided family till 1264 (1857). In that year, as the plaintiff alleges, Nursingh Bera separated himself, but the other three went on living as an undivided family till 1284 (1877). The defendants deny this, and say that the four brothers lived together till 1264, and then separated, and were never re-united.

In February 1878, Korunamoyi instituted a suit against Gopeenath and Chintamani for the share of the whole property which came to her through her deceased husband Roghunath. This suit was compromised by the solehnama to which the plaintiff now objects. The defendant Gopeenath in the solehnama agrees to give Chintamoni 15 bighas of land and Korunamoyi 25 bighas, and Korunamoyi for herself, and Bishtupria as guardian of Chintamoni, agree to give up all rights to the property of their deceased husbands.

MADHUB BERA.

The plaintiff alleges that Gopeenath, in collusion with Bishtupria, executed the solehnama with the object of injuring his reversionary right to the property left by Nemye Bera. This appears to me to be an allegation of fraud on the part of Bishtupria, and part of the relief the plaintiff asks for is that the solehnama may be declared fraudulent.

The principle points raised in appeal are as follows: First.—The plaintiff is the next reversionary heir, and therefore, cannot bring any suit. Second.—This is not a case where, in the exercise of sound discretion, a declaratory decree should be made. Third.—The plaintiff should have brought a suit for appointing a Manager to the estate, and not having [819] done so, the provision in Act I of 1877, s. 42,* precludes him from suing for a declaratory decree. Fourth.—The plaintiff alleges that Nursingh Bera separated in 1864. As no partial separation of a Hindu family can take place, the plaintiff should have proved that the remaining three brothers formally re-united. He has not done this, and therefore the family must be considered as divided. Fifth.—The lower Court's finding on the evidence that the plaintiff's account of the separation of the family was not correct.

As regards the first point, I have not been able to find any precise definition of the term reversionary heir, but it appears to me that the plaintiff is the heir, because on the death of Chintamoni and Bishtupria, he will be entitled to the property as the heir of Nemye. Even supposing, however, that he is not the next reversionary heir. I should, on the authority of the cases of Shama Sundari Chowdrain v. Jumona Chowdrain (24 W. R., 86), and Retoo Raj Panday v. Lalljee Panday (24 W. R., 399), consider that he had the right to institute a suit. It is quite true that in those two cases, the grounds on which a remote reversionary heir can sue are that the holder of the property as committed waste and fraud, and that the lower Court has not in this case found that Bishtupria acted fraudulently, but I think the nature of the compromise, supposing the plaintiff's account of the separation to be true, shows that Bishtupria must have acted fraudulently. If it is true, that in 1284 the family was joint, then Bishtupria could have claimed some 60 bighas, and abandoned all her claims. I think this can hardly be considered as a mere act of waste, and the plaintiff himself distinctly alleges it to be fraudulent. I, therefore, consider that the plaintiff was justified in bringing a suit, though whether he is entitled to a declaratory decree will be considered further on. The next point is that this is not a case in which the Court would, in the exercise of a sound discretion, grant a declaratory decree. The plaintiff is a minor and Chintamani is also a minor, and it may, therefore, be reasonably supposed that many years may elapse before the plaintiff can inherit the property, and it is, of course, quite possible that he may not inherit at all. The case of Hunsbutti Kerain v. Ishri Dutt Koer (1. L. R., 5 Cal., 512), is the latest case that has been brought to my notice, and that lays down very clearly the cases where declaratory decrees should not be granted. The case of Sri Narayan Mitter v. Krishna Sundari Dasi (11 B. L. R., 171), quoted in the above case, shows that the granting of such decrees is entirely within the discretion of the Court. The lower Court in its judgment says: "Her (Bishtupria's) assent is prejudicial to the plaintiff's cause which he may not be in a position to substantiate after all the evidence shall have been taken away or destroyed by lapse of time." From this it appears that the lower Court considered that a decree should be granted, because there is no power to entertain a suit to perpetuate evidence, but in the passage quoted at 1. L. R., 5 Cal., p. 519, the Privy Council appear to have held that this is not a proper reason for making such decrees. In this case, indeed, as the separa-[820]tion, according to the plaintiff, took place so late as 1281, there is as yet certainly no ground for thinking that the evidence will be destroyed for some time. The inconvenience of granting such decrees is evident from the concluding part of the lower Court's order, where the plaintiff is declared to be entitled on the death of Chintamani and Bishtupria, to a one-third share of some cattle and paddy. This part of the order is, I think, quite useless, as by the time the plaintiff inherits, the cattle and paddy will probably not be in existence: if they are, their value will have decreased. Under all the circumstances, I do not think that this is a case where a declaratory decree should be passed.

* [Sec. 42 :— Any person entitled to any legal character, or to any right as to any property, may institute a suit against any person denying, or interested to deny, his title to such character or right, and the Court may in its discretion make therein a declaration that he is so entitled, and the plaintiff need not in such suit ask for any further relief.

Discretion of Court as to declarations of status or right.

Provided that no Court shall make any such declaration where the plaintiff, being able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title, omits to do so.

The next point is that the plaintiff could have brought a suit for the appointment of a manager, and that as he has not done so, he is not entitled to a declaratory decree. On the authority of the two cases previously quoted, Shama Soondree Chowdhram v. Juvona Chowdhram (24 W. R., 85) and Retoa Raj Panday v. Lalljee Panday (24 W. R., 399), I think the plaintiff might have brought such a suit.

The Subordinate Judge also appears to have been of the same opinion, as he apparently only abstained from appointing a manager, because the plaintiff had only asked for a declaratory decree, and had brought the suit on a stamped paper sufficient for that purpose only. The remarks of the Subordinate Judge on the seventh issue lead me to suppose that, had the plaintiff brought a suit for the appointment of a manager on a properly stamped paper, the lower Court would have given him a decree, appointing a manager. Whatever view, however, the lower Court might have taken of a suit for appointing a manager, it was, I think, quite within the power of the plaintiff to bring such a suit; and as he has omitted to do so, I do not think that the lower Court could make a declaratory decree. The terms of the proviso in s. 42 of Act I of 1877 are explicit, and do not leave the Court any option in the matter.

As regards the fourth point, the lower Court appears to have found that the plaintiff's account of the separation of Nursingh Bera in 1264 is true, and that a division of the property of the family took place then. If that is so, I think that the cases of Ramhari Surma v. Trihi Ram Surma (7 B. L. R., 337: 15 W. R., 442) and of Radha Churn Das v. Kripa Sindhu Das (I. L. R. 5 Cal., 474), show that proof of subsequent reunion by agreement is necessary. It appears that the division of the joint property breaks up the family, and makes the usual presumption regarding members of a family living together fail, and that the party wishing to show that members of a family who continued to live together, after such division, are joint, must adduce proof that the members by agreement have reunited themselves into a joint [821] family; and that mere proof of commensality is not sufficient. There is certainly no proof of any such agreement, and, therefore, the plaintiff's contention that the three other brothers continued to live together as a joint family, after Nursingh's separation, is not properly established.

The District Judge then reversed the decision of the Court of First Instance and dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Tweedale and Mr. Mendies for the Appellant.

Baboo Mohun Mohun Roy and Baboo Saroda Persad Roy for the Respondents.

Prinsep, J.—Madhub Bera died leaving four sons, who admittedly formed a joint Hindu family. In 1264 Nursingh the eldest separated from his brothers. In 1878, Korunamoyi, the widow and heiress of the son of the second brother Goburdhun, sued the third son Gopeenath, the third brother, and Chintamani, the widow and heiress of the son of the fourth brother Manikram (deceased), for her share of the family property. That suit ended in a solehnama or compromise under which Gopeenath, on the one hand, agreed to give up 25 bighas to Korunamoyi and 15 bighas to Chintamani, while Korunamoyi for herself and Bishtupria, the mother-in-law and guardian of Chintamani, on the other hand, agreed to give up all rights to any family property of the brothers whom they represented.

The plaintiff, a minor, being the son of a daughter of the fourth son Manikram the fourth brother as reversionary heir after Chintamani and Bish-tupria Hindu widows having only a life interest, sues to have it declared that this solehnama was collusively obtained, and is therefore inoperative as against him and that he is entitled on the death of these ladies to obtain a one-third share of the family estate held by the three brothers jointly after Nursingh had separated from them.

The District Judge in appeal has, in exercise of his discretion, refused to give plaintiff a declaratory decree, first, because, as he remarks many years may elapse before plaintiff can inherit the property, and it is, of course, quite possible that he may not [822] inherit at all. He next seems to think that the object of giving a declaratory decree in a case of this description is to perpetuate evidence, and that this is not a valid ground for exercising the discretion vested in him by law. Lastly, he thinks that, owing to the perishable nature of the moveable property claimed, a decree, which is not likely to be operative until that property has disappeared or altered in value, should not be passed.

It appears to us that the District Judge has not exercised a proper discretion in refusing to give plaintiff a declaratory decree, if he has established his right to set aside the compromise.

The perishable nature of some of the moveable properties claimed, and the consequent improbability that they would all be in existence or in their present form when the plaintiff's right to inherit may accrue, is not a valid reason for refusing to set aside any deed or decree which interferes with his right as reversioner.

The District Judge has, however, proceeded to hold that the present suit is untenable, because the plaintiff has not sued for the appointment of a manager to take charge of his share of the family property in consequence of the waste committed by the widows. But, as has been already pointed out, this is not a suit to restrain the widow from committing waste, but to set aside a compromise which is, if at all, only voidable by the plaintiff.

Lastly, the District Judge, in concurrence with the first Court, has held as Nursingh the eldest of the four brothers separated in 1264, "a division of the family then took place;" that there is no proof of any agreement on the part of the other three brothers to reunite; that mere proof of commensality is not sufficient; and that consequently the plaintiff's suit must fail on this ground also.

The first point then for our consideration is, whether the separation of one member of a joint Hindu family necessarily creates a separation between the other members, and causes the general disruption of that family.

If this be so, then it will be for us to determine whether any specific agreement between the other members is absolutely necessary for proof of their reunion, and whether it cannot be presumed from their subsequent conduct.

[823] On the first point we have been referred to the case of Radha Churn Dass v. Kripa Sindhu Dass (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 474), as an authority for deciding it in the affirmative.

On the other hand, we have considered the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the cases of Rewan Persad v. Mussamut Radha Bibee (4 Moore's, I. A., 137), and Mussamut Cheetha v. Mihcen Lall (11 Moore's I. A., 369) (see p. 380), neither of which cases were laid before the Division Bench, which decided the case first mentioned. The judgment of their Lordships in the case of Rewan Persad (p. 168) is in the following terms:—

"We think that it may be admitted that, the prima facie presumption where there are no circumstances to affect it, is that every Hindu family of this class was an undivided family, and, consequently, this presumption must prevail, unless the circumstances of this case lead to a contrary conclusion. We must, therefore, consider the circumstances, having, however, first directed our attention to some points of Hindu law which may have a bearing upon the conclusion to be drawn from the facts.

"First: We apprehend it to be undisputed that a division may be affected without instrument in writing. Secondly: That a division may be either total or partial. Thirdly: That a separation from commensality does not, as a necessary consequence, affect a division, or, at least, of the whole undivided property."

Moreover, we find their Lordships in the well-known case of Deen Dyal Lall v. Jugacep Narain Singh (I. L. R., 4 I. A., 247 (see p. 255): s. C., I. L. R., 3 Cal., 198] again recognizing the continuance of the joint estate of a family after a partition so as to separate the share of one member. It was in that case held that, although a member of a joint family could not alienate his share in the family estate, the purchaser of his rights in execution of a decree against him, could, by insisting on a partition so as to definitively ascertain those rights, obtain possession of a distinct portion of that estate which represented them.

The Judgment proceeds thus :

"It seems to their Lordships that the same principle may and [824] ought to be applied to shares in a joint and undivided Hindu estate, and that it may be so applied without unduly interfering with the peculiar status and rights of the coparceners in such an estate, if the right of the purchaser at the execution sale be limited to that of compelling the partition, which his debtor might have compelled had he been so minded before the alienation of his share took place."

From these observations we understand that it was not disputed in argument, and it was accepted by their Lordships as a rule of Hindu law, that the separation of one member of a Hindu family does not in itself affect the position of the other members inter se. In the case of Mussamut Cheetha (11 Moore's I. A., 369), their Lordships (p. 380) thus describe the estate of the family of the parties to the suit :—

"The family originally consisted of three brothers—Shama Dass, Damodur Dass, and Koonj Kishore Dass. It is admitted on all hands that Shama Dass separated himself from his brothers, and took his share of the ancestral estate as separate property. It is, however, clear upon the evidence (and if the fact be not admitted, it is hardly disputed on the part of the appellant) that the two other brothers continued joint after the separation of Shama Dass; and further, that for many purposes Damodur Dass and the respondent (being his nephew, the son of Koonj Kishore Dass) were members of a joint family at the time of Damodur Dass' death."

Speaking therefore for myself, as one of the Judges who decided the case of Radha Churn Dass, I am of opinion that the point has been definitively decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council, and had these judgments been brought to my notice, my judgment in the case of Radha Churn Dass would have been otherwise. The case must, therefore, be remanded to the lower Appellate Court to determine on the merits, whether the compromise can be set aside. We allow no costs in this Court. Case remanded.

NOTES.

[EFFECT OF THE SEPARATION OF ONE COPARCENER ON THE STATUS OF THE OTHERS—

One coparcener's share is generally ascertained by reference to the shares of other coparceners, and thereby the shares of the others may be said to be incidentally ascertained; this has led to the proposition that even when one separated, the others also separated.

This case is an authority for the position that on the separation of one coparcener the others may continue to be joint. In the case of 30 Cal. 729 P. C. the Privy Council stated that, on the separation of one coparcener, there is no presumption of jointness as to others, but the fact should be proved, like any other fact, of their remaining joint or re-united. "Their Lordships however do not say that in such a case the family is in all cases to be deemed to be divided; they point out that there may be cases where the shares of all the members of the family have to be ascertained, and say that it is in that sense that the separation of one is said to be the separation of all"—(1908) 31 Mad. 482. See also (1906) 5 C. L. J. 417 at 424 where it is pointed out that the 30 Cal. 729 case is not inconsistent with 9 Cal. 817. BHASHYAM AYYANGAR, J. in (1901) 25 Mad. 149 (11 M. L. J. 353) at p. 157 made observations to a similar effect; 16 C. L. J. 311; 18 I. C. 604.

If it is always a question of intention at the partition whether an entire division or only partial partition was contemplated; whether the others that remained together were re-united or continued to be joint.—30 Cal., 231, 5 C. L. J. 417 at 424; 35 Bom. 293.

This fact should be established like any other fact :—(1912) 1 I. C. 553; 1913 P. L. R. 8.

The following have been held to be material circumstances :—

(1) Whether the partition purported only to specify the shares falling to each branch of the family :—(1911) 10 I. C. 103; (1885) 12 Cal., 262.

(2) Whether the partition deed, award, decree etc., went further and defined the shares of the other coparceners inter se or of coparceners of each branch inter se :—(1906) 29 All., 93; 1906 A. W. N. 287; 8 A. L. J. 688.

(3) In a Mitakshara family, it is enough, if there were a numerical calculation of the shares; 30 Cal., 231 at 255; but see 5 Mad. 362 at 367.

This consideration does not apply to the case of a Dayabhaga family, where even without division every coparcener's share is known:—5 C.L.J. 417.

(4) The conduct of the parties must be looked at in order to arrive at what constitutes the true test of partition according to Hindu law, namely, the intention of the members of the family to become separate owners:—30 Cal. 231 at 253.

(5) The mere fact of continuing together after the share was ascertained was in some cases held insufficient; in some sufficient:—(1899) 22 Mad. 470; (1912) 35 All. 41; (1910) 6 I. C. 795; (1911) 35 Bom., 293; (1912) 18 I. C., 601; (1913) P. R. 24; (1912) P. L. R., 16; (1913) P. W. R., 18; (1911) M.W.N., 310. See these cases also as to the effect of describing oneself joint.

(6) If the state of re-union is sought to be established, then the conditions under which it can take place should be satisfied:—(1912) 14 I. C. 237 (those not party to the partition cannot re-unite); (1903) 30 Cal. 729; (1905) 33 Cal. 371 (who can re-unite); (1910) 37 Cal. 703 (minor, cannot?).

(7) Minority of a co-partener affects the inferences:—(1910). 37 Cal. 703; 30 Cal. 729.

(8) Any unequivocal expression of intention will outweigh many acts consistent with either supposition:—(1910) 10 I. C. 957; 4 S. L. R. 225; 13 I. C. 30.

[823] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 9th March, 1883.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY.

Surjya Narain Singh.....Defendant

Sirdhary Lall.....Plaintiff.*

Hindu Law, Contract—Debtor and Creditor—Damdupat—Principal and interest—Interest in excess of principal.

Since the passing of Act XXVIII of 1855, a Hindu creditor may claim from his Hindu debtor interest in excess of the principal sum lent, should such interest have accrued.

The rule of law prohibiting the recovery of interest in excess of the principal sum lent was in force in the Mofussil of Bengal not as a provision of Hindu law, but as a statutory rule introduced by Regulation XV of 1793, and embracing all persons contracting in the Mofussil.

THIS was a suit to recover the sum of Rs. 58,800, the amount of two mortgage bonds which had been executed by the defendants in favour of the plaintiff on the 8th June 1872 and the 31st of March 1873, respectively. The principal due on the first bond was Rs. 1,000, and the interest Rs. 1,308. The principal due on the second bond was Rs. 19,000, and the interest due on this bond was Rs. 37,492. Two questions arose on this appeal: (1) whether compound interest was chargeable under the term of the bonds; (2) whether interest greater in amount than the principal could be recovered. The Court below decided both these points in favour of the plaintiff, following, on the second point, the case of Deen Dyal Paramanick v. Kalesh Chunder Pal Chowdhry (I. L. R. 1 Cal., 92; 24 W. R. 106), in preference to Ramcomoy Audicary v. Johur Lall Dutt (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 867). One of the defendants, a subsequent mortgagee, appealed, making the plaintiff alone the respondent.

The Advocate-General (Mr. G. C. Paul), Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry and Baboo Taruck Nath Palit for the Appellant.

* Appeal from Original Decree, No. 108 of 1881, against the decree of Moulvi Hafiz Abdul Kariem, First Subordinate Judge of Bhagulpore, dated the 11th February 1881.

The Advocate-General.—The appellant is entitled to dispute the amount due on the plaintiff's mortgage—Ram Chandra Mankeshwar v. Bhimrao Ruvi (I.L.R., 1 Bom., 577.) The plaintiff cannot recover [826] compound interest on his bond. At any rate, he cannot recover more interest than the amount of his principal.—Ram Lal Mooerjee v. Haran Chandra Dhar [3 B. L. R., (O. C.), 130] ; Mia Khan v. Bibi Bibijan (5 B. L. R., 500) ; Omda Khanu v. Brojendro Koomar Roy Chawdhry (12 B.L.R., 451) ; Ramconnoy Auicary v. Johur Lall Dutt (I.L.R., 5 Cal., 867). This rule is a rule of Hindu law, Colebrooke, Bk. I, para. 59 ; Goverdhan Das v. Waris Ali (4 Sel. Rep., 961) ; and is still in force as it has not been abolished by legislative enactment, Act VI of 1871, s. 24.

Mr. Evans and Baboo Doorga Mohun Das for the Respondent.

Mr. Evans.—The rule that interest was not to exceed the principal was a specific rule introduced by Regulation XV of 1793, and was rescinded by Act XXVIII of 1855—Kalica Prosad Misser v. Gobind Chunder Sein (Suth. S. C. C., 110 : 2 W. R. S. C. C., 1). It was not then introduced as a living custom of Hindu law, and, in fact, like other rules laid down by Menu, it has long been obsolete—Ramalakshmi Ammal v. Sivannantha Perumal Sethurayar (14 Moore's I. A., 570 ; 12 B. L. R., 396) ; Lalloobhoy Bappobhoy v. Cassibai (L. R., 7 I. A. 212 ; I. L. R., 5 Bom., 110). The Bombay Regulations were different—Khushalchand Lalchand v. Ibrahim Fakir [3 Bom. II. C. R., (A. C.) 23]. The Civil Courts' Act (VI of 1871), s. 24, does not apply. [The learned Counsel also referred to Huromonee Gooptia v. Gobind Coomar Chowdhry (5 W.R., 51), and to Madhub Chunder Poramanick v. Raj Coomar Doss (14 B. L. R., 76).]

Prinsep, J.—The questions raised in this appeal are, first, whether the bond marked "A," executed by Baboo Ram Gopal Singh to Baboo Sirdhary Lall dated the 31st March 1873, entitles Baboo Sirdhary Lall to demand compound interest ; and, second, whether under Hindu law plaintiff was entitled to recover arrears of interest to an amount greater than the principal. One portion of the bond runs as follows : "I, the declarant, * * * have borrowed from Baboo Sirdhary Lall, inhabitant and part proprietor [827] of Maskin Masihuddinnuggur, pergunnah Bhagulpore, Rs. 19,000, bearing interest at the rate of one rupee five annas per cent. per mensem from this day up to the date of repayment. Therefore I, the declarant, do hereby declare and state in writing that I shall pay the interest on the said sum every year, and the principal in one lump sum in Magh 1286, F. S ; that whatever amount will be paid for interest or principal, I, the declarant, shall have the same credited on the back of this bond, the plea of payment, under a separate receipt, or in any other way, shall be invalid ; that I shall pay off the interest for each year after adjustment ; that out of the amount paid in a year, at first the interest found due on adjustment of the account for the year shall be deducted, and if there remains any surplus, it shall be set off against the principal ; that I, the declarant, shall not claim any interest on the amount thus paid ; that I shall pay interest at the said rate until payment on the entire sum found to be due after adjustment of the account for a year."

We think that the interpretation of this document is that the accounts are to be made up at the end of each successive year, and that whatever remains due is treated as principal, and bears interest at the stipulated rate of one rupee five annas per cent. per mensem, and that the contention of the appellant, that the plaintiff cannot claim compound interest under the bond, is untenable.

In regard to the second question it is necessary, in order to come to a correct conclusion, to enter into some details in respect of the law relating to usury in Lower Bengal. By Regulation XV of 1879, s. 6, it was declared that if the interest on any debt, calculating according to the rates allowed by the Regulation, should accumulate so as to exceed the principal, the Courts were not, except in certain specified cases, to decree a greater sum for interest than the amount of such principal. This was not declared to be a principle of Hindu law, applicable only to Hindus, but was a statutory provision embracing all persons contracting in the Mofussil. Nevertheless, it was the practice of the Courts to allow interest in excess of the principal where the interest had accumulated owing to reasons not ascribable in any degree to the laches of the creditor. In the case of Jankee [828] Pershad v. Maharajah Oodwunt Narain Singh (3 Sel. Rep., 270), it was decided that interest exceeding the principal could, in the case of Hindus, be granted if the excess accrued pendente lite, and there is no fault attributable to the creditor. No custom or usage "among Hindus was asserted in that case. Subsequently, in the case of Goverdhun Dass v. Waris Ali (4 Sel. Rep., 261), interest exceeding the principal was granted. This was the state of the law and practice of the Courts until the supersession of Regulation XV of 1793 by Act XXVIII of 1855. By s. 2 of that Act it was declared that in any suit in which interest was recoverable the amount should be adjudged or decreed by the Court at the rate, if any, agreed upon by the parties, and if no rate should be agreed upon, at such rate as the Court should deem reasonable. Subsequent to the passing of this Act, in the case of Kalica Prosad Misser v. Gobind Chunder Sein (Suth. S.C. C., 110: 2 W. R. S.C. C., 1), it was decided that the law under which the claim for accumulated interest was limited in amount to a sum not exceeding the principal had been rescinded by Act XXVIII of 1855. This was a case between Hindus. This decision was followed in the case of Huromonee Gooptia v. Gobind Coomar Chowdhry (5 W. R., 51), and in the case of Omda Khanum v. Brojendra Coomar Roy Chowdhry (12 B. L. R., 451). It would thus appear that from the earliest times up to the year 1874 no claim for a reduction of interest has ever been allowed on the ground of Hindu law or usage, but on the contrary that this contention whenever raised has always been repudiated, and in several cases the Courts granted interest beyond the principal. In this respect the Courts in the province of Lower Bengal have been in no way singular. The very same point has been decided in conformity with this view in the North-Western Provinces to which the Bengal Regulations apply, and in Madras where the Regulation is of similar import.

In the case of Annaji Rau v. Ragubai alias Sithabai (6 Mad. H. C., 400) the Court at Madras declared that in the matter of interest the Hindu law was not binding in the Mofussil. This [829] decision was followed in the case of Kuar Lachman Singh v. Pirbhu Lal (6 N. W. P., H. C., 358). So that there is a complete consensus of opinion in Bengal, in the N.-W. P., and in Madras, that since the passing of Act XXVIII of 1855, a Hindu may claim from another Hindu interest in excess of the principal. We do not refer to the cases decided in the Bombay Presidency, because, as appears from the case of Khusalchand Lalchand v. Ibrahim Fakir (3 Bom. H. C. A. C., 23), the Regulations in that Presidency were different from those in Bengal and Madras. The learned Advocate-General, in support of his view that interest should not be allowed beyond the principal, has referred to the decision of Sir BARNES PEACOCK in the case of Ram Lal Mookerjee v. Haran Chandra Dhar (3 B. L. R., O. C., 130), in which it was decided that within the town of Calcutta, interest as between Hindus might not exceed the principal.

This decision, though doubted in the case of Meah Khan v. Bibi Bibijan (5 B. L. R., 500) has been followed in a case lately decided in the Original Side of this Court, but this judgment is founded upon considerations special to the town of Calcutta, and has no application to the Mofussil.

We are, therefore, of opinion that there is a whole series of cases from the earliest times to show that in Bengal interest beyond the principal is demandable among Hindus, and the contention now raised by the learned Advocate-General cannot be sustained.

In this view, we dismiss the appeal with costs. Appeal dismissed.

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY.

Ram Narain Sing.....Judgment-debtor
Pearay Bhugut.....Decree-holder.*

Hindu Law—Husband and wife—Immoveable property—Gift—Deed of gift.

It is not necessary in Hindu law, in order that a wife should take an absolute estate in immoveable property under a deed of gift from her husband, that the gift should be made with such words of limitation as are ordinarily used to convey an estate of inheritance. The intention of the husband may be expressed in other ways, and is a matter of construction merely.

Koonj Behary Dhur v. Prem Chand Dutt (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 684 : 5 C. L. R., 561) distinguished.

Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry for the Appellant.

Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose for the Respondent.

Prinsep, J.—This case depends upon the proper construction of a deed of grant from a husband to his wife. The document sets forth that it conveys all his rights to the lady without exception; that she shall take possession of his property; that neither he nor his heirs shall at any time have any claim either to the property or to the price or value of it.

It has been contended on behalf of the appellant, first, that, unless there are express terms in the grant, such as will convey ordinarily an estate of inheritance, the gift must be taken to be only one lasting for the lifetime of the lady. In support of the contention we have been referred to the case of Koonj Behary Dhur v. Prem Chand Dutt (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 684 : 5 C. L. R., 561), and, no doubt, if one sentence of that judgment be taken by itself, it would support the contention now raised [831] before us. But when we look at the case as a whole, we find that the learned Judges who expressed that opinion were not content to base their judgment on it, but actually decided upon the terms of the grant. There is also another case of Srimati Pabitra Dasi v. Damodar Jana * Appeal from Appellate Orders, Nos. 272, 273, and 274 of 1882, against the order of W. Verner, Esq., Judge of Bhagulpore, dated the 8th June 1882, modifying the order of Moulvi Syed Fikruddin Hossen, Munsif of Jamooyee, dated the 3rd June 1881 and 6th May 1882.

(7 B. L. R., 697), which does not coincide with the expression of opinion in the case to which we have already referred. It seems to us that that statement made by the learned Judges is not binding upon us as a judicial decision, and is inconsistent with the case referred to of Srimati Pabitra Dasi v. Damodar Jana (7 B. L. R., 697).

We are, therefore, of opinion that this should be decided upon the terms of the grant. Looking at the fact that the husband divested himself of all his rights that he prohibited his descendants from claiming the property or its price, we think that the gift was a gift out and out.

In this view we dismiss the appeal with costs. Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 5th April, 1883.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE McDONELL AND MR. JUSTICE TOTTENHAM.

Tarruck Chunder Bhuttacharjee and othersJudgment-debtors

Divendro Nath Sanyal and others.....Decree-holders.*

Execution—Joint decree—Payment out of Court to one of several joint judgment-creditors—Part satisfaction certified to the Court—Application for execution of full amount of decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 244, 258.

On an application for execution for the full amount due under a decree by some of several joint decree-holders the judgment-debtor objected to execution being granted for the full amount of the decree on the ground that he had already paid off a large portion of the money due under the decree to B, one of the joint decree-holders. The payment was made out of Court, but B, who claimed to be entitled to a $12\frac{1}{2}$ annas share in the decree, certified the payment in the manner prescribed by s. 258 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), and represented that his claim had been satisfied in full. The other joint decree-holders denied B's right to the $12\frac{1}{2}$ annas share claimed by him, and refused to recognise the [832] payment said to have been made to him. The lower Court disallowed the objection, and granted execution for the full amount of the decree.

Held, that, regard being had to the provisions of the General Clauses Act (Act I of 1868), the word "decree-holder" in s. 258 of Act XIV of 1882 should be read in the plural, and looking at the provisions of s. 231 of the latter Act, the Court ought not to recognise payments made out of Court unless made and certified for the benefit of all the joint decree-holders of any portion of the decree in excess of that to which the decree-holder so paid is undisputedly entitled.

Held, also, that a judgment-debtor is entitled to credit for any sum paid bona fide to one of several joint decree-holders, and duly certified to the Court by the latter, and that the other joint decree-holders cannot execute the decree for more than their own share.

Held, further, that in this case the lower Court was wrong in wholly ignoring the payment certified by the decree-holder B, and that it should have determined, first, whether the payment to B was a fraud on the other joint decree-holders; and, secondly, what amount the latter were entitled to have out of the whole decree, the latter being the main question between the applicants for execution and the judgment-debtor, and as such clearly within the scope of s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Ranee Nyna Kooer v. Doolee Chund (22 W. R., 77); Brojeswari Chowdhranee v. Tripoora Soondree Debi (3 C. L. R., 513); and Mahima Chandra Roy v. Pyari Mohan Chowdhry (2 B. L. R., Ap., 43).

THIS was an appeal against the order of the Officiating Judge of Rajshahye disallowing the objections of a judgment-debtor in an execution case. The facts appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report in the judgment of Mr. Justice TOTTENHAM.

The Advocate-General (Mr. G. C. Paul) (with him Baboo Rash Behary Ghose and Baboo Aukhil Chunder Sen) for the Appellant.

The lower Court is wrong in holding that a certificate is of no effect, unless made by all the decree-holders in a case where there may be more than one decree-holder. Payment to one of several joint-creditors is in law a payment to all, and consequently the payment here to the decree-holder is a payment to all persons having a joint interest with him in the decree. Here the Court below was wrong in granting execution for the full amount of the decree, as one of the decree-holders, [833] viz., Behary Lall, at any rate admitted that his claim had been satisfied. The Court below also should have determined the amount of the share Behary Lall had in the decree, when it was disputed by the other decree-holders, as the judgment-debtor was at any rate entitled to claim that his portion of the decree had been satisfied—Ranee Nyna Kooer v. Doolee Chund (22 W. R., 77); Brojeswari Chowdhranee v. Tripoora Soondree Debi (3 C. L. R., 513); Ahamuddeen v. Grish Chunder Shamunt (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 350); and Chitty on Contracts, 716.

Baboo Rash Behary Ghose followed, and in support of the above contentions cited Wise v. Moulvie Abdol Ali (7 W. R., 136); Umrith Nath Chowdhry v. Chunder Kishore Singh (21 W. R., 31); Shib Chunder Dass v. Ram Chunder Poddar (16 W. R., 29); Kally Soondery Dabia v. Hurrish Chunder Chowdhry (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 594; s.c., on appeal, L. R., 10 I. A., 4; s.c., ante p. 482); and Ahamuddeen v. Grish Chunder Shamunt (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 350).

Baboo Gopal Lal Mitter (with him Baboo Saroda Churn Mitter) for the Respondent.

The other decree-holders are in no way bound by the payment out of Court to Behary Lall. In Mahima Chundra Roy v. Pyari Mohan Chowdhry (2 B. L. R., Ap. 43), it has been held that, although the decree had been fully satisfied by payment of the whole amount of the decree to one of two decree-holders, the other was still entitled to re-open the proceedings, and take out execution for his moiety.

The Judgments of the Court (MCDONELL and TOTTENHAM, JJ.), were as follow:—

Tottenham, J.—The cause of this appeal, which arises from the execution of a decree, is the refusal of the lower Court to recognize an alleged payment out of Court by the judgment-debtors of a large portion of the amount of the decree to one [834] amongst several joint decree-holders, who also had certified the payment in the manner prescribed in s. 258 of the Civil Procedure Code. This individual did not profess to have received payment for the joint benefit of all the decree-holders; but claiming to be entitled to 12½ annas share of the whole, represented that his claim had been satisfied.

Application was made by the other decree-holders for execution of the whole decree. They denied the right of Behary Lall to $12\frac{1}{2}$ annas share, or to any more than a small fraction of the decretal amount, and refused to recognize the payment said to have been made to him.

The lower Court was of opinion that a payment out of Court could not be recognized under s. 258 unless certified by all the decree-holders; and that a sharer in a joint decree could not be allowed to realize for himself separately. He, therefore, overruled the debtor's objection, and holding that it was unnecessary to decide to what extent the decree-holders were severally interested, he ordered the execution to proceed as for the whole amount. It has been argued before us for the appellants that the lower Court was wrong in holding that a certificate under s. 256 is of no effect, unless made by all the decree-holders in a case where there are several; that payment to one of several joint-creditors is in law payment to them all; and that at any rate the Court below ought not, on the present application, to have allowed the applicants to take out execution for more than their own share of the decree since Behary Lall admitted having received his share. In connection with this last point there has been some discussion, whether under s. 244 of the Code the amount of the respective shares of the several decree-holders is a question between the parties to the suit, i.e., plaintiffs and defendants, or is one between the plaintiffs themselves; and, if the latter, whether the Court can decide it in the execution proceedings.

To show that it is not essential that all the decree-holders must unite in certifying under s. 258 a payment made out of Court, the learned Advocate-General cited Ranee Nyna Koor v. Doolce Chund (22 W. R., 77), and Brojeswari Chowdhralee v. Tripoora Soonderee [835] Debi (3 C. L. R., 513). Certainly in these cases the Court did take into consideration the fact that payment had been certified under s. 206 of Act VIII of 1859 by one decree-holder.

In each of these cases one of the decree-holders had certified payment of the whole decree. In the first case this Court held that, under the circumstances, the remaining decree-holders ought not to be allowed to take out execution again, until they had satisfied the Court that they knew nothing of the payment; that if made it was a fraud upon them; and that the judgment-debtor was privy to the fraud.

In the second case also full payment had been certified; but on enquiry the Court disbelieved the fact of any payment at all: yet held that, inasmuch as the party certifying it was admittedly entitled to one moiety, the other decree-holder could not be allowed to execute the decree for more than the other moiety.

In both cases the Court recognized the validity of payments certified by one only of joint decree-holders. And whatever be the correct technical construction of s. 258, i.e., whether "the decree-holders," may be construed "as any one amongst any number of decree-holders" it seems impossible to say that, so far as the undisputed share of the one who certifies is concerned, the Court would be wrong in giving credit to the judgment-debtor.

But I must say that I am disposed to think that, regard being had to the provisions of the General Clauses Act (which governs the present Code, though it did not touch Act VIII of 1859), the words "the decree-holder" in s. 258 should be read in the plural in cases in which there are more decree-holders than one; and that, strictly, the Court ought not to recognize payments made out of Court, unless made and certified for the benefit of all, at least in cases where, as in this one, the extent of the shares is in dispute. I am rather strengthened in this view by the terms of s. 231.

That section provides that any one or more of joint decree-holders may apply for execution of the whole decree for the benefit of all. The Court may grant such application if it sees sufficient cause for doing so; but it must then pass some order [836] for protecting the interests of the persons who have not joined in the application. Whereas then by this section the Court is not permitted to allow one of several joint decree-holders to obtain execution of the whole decree for his own individual benefit, it seems unlikely that it was intended that, under s. 258, the same Court should recognize the payment out of Court to one of several joint decree-holders for his own benefit, and not for the benefit of all, of any portion of the decree in excess of that to which he is undisputedly entitled. In the case cited above, Brojeswari Chowdhranee v. Tripoorra Soonderee Debi (3 C. L. R., 513), this principle seems to have been adopted; for credit was given only for the amount of the acknowledged share of the decree-holder who had admitted having received the whole amount of the decree. And in another case, Mahima Chandra Roy v. Pyari Mohan Chowdhry (2 B. L. R., Ap., 43), it was held that, although the decree had been fully satisfied by payment of the whole amount to one of two decree-holders, the other one was still entitled to re-open the proceedings, and take out execution for a moiety of the amount of the decree.

But in the case of Ranee Nyna Koor v. Doolee Chund (22 W. R., 77), payment of the whole decree having been certified by one, the principal decree-holder, this Court would not suffer the other decree-holders to execute the entire decree.

The decided cases, therefore, do seem to establish this, that a judgment-debtor is entitled to credit for any sum paid bond fide to one of several joint decree-holders, and duly certified to the Court by the latter; and that the other joint-creditor cannot execute the decree for more than their own share.

This being so, I would hold in the present case that the lower Court was wrong in wholly ignoring the payment certified by the decree-holder Behary Lall. Whether the debtors are entitled to have credit for the whole of the sum certified, or for only a portion of it, will depend upon other considerations. It will depend partly upon the question whether payment to one joint decree-holder is good as against all; and partly on the question whether the Court in the execution proceedings can determine [837] the shares of the joint decree-holders severally. As to the first question the Advocate-General's position is that in law the release of a debt by one of several joint-creditors is a release by all: and the case of Ranee Nyna Koor v. Doolee Chund (22 W. R., 77,) seems to affirm this principle in the absence of fraud. But the case of Mahima Chandra Roy v. Pyari Mohan Chowdhry (2 B. L. R., Ap., 43), directly ignores the principle; while the case of Brojeswari Chowdhranee v. Tripoorra Soonderee Debi (3 C. L. R. 513,) neither affirms nor contradicts it; for it was held that no payment had been made at all. Apparently then the lower Court could not properly dispose of the judgment-debtor's objection in this case, and order execution in favour of the decree-holders who applied for it, without deciding first, whether the payment to Behary Lall was a fraud upon them committed by the judgment-debtors, and next what amount they were entitled to have out of the whole decree. This last question is, no doubt, one that is between Behary Lall and the other decree-holders; and as such may not be one which the Court should decide in the execution proceedings. But it is not necessary to decide whether the Court has jurisdiction to decide the point as between the decree-holders; for it is obviously also a question, and the main question between the applicants for execution and the judgment-debtors: and as such it clearly comes within the scope of s. 244.

Shortly stated, the question is for what amount are the applicants entitled to have execution? And this question it is necessary for the Court executing the decree to determine under s. 244, it being clear that Behary Lall's share at least has been paid off.

I would, therefore, allow this appeal; and, setting aside the lower Court's order, would send the case back to have the question determined.

McDonell, J.—I concur in the order of remand and for the reasons given by my learned colleague. The appellant will be entitled to five gold mohurs as costs of this appeal.

Appeal allowed and case remanded.

Land Acquisition Act (X of 1870, ss. 15, 39)—Appeal—Second Appeal—High Court, Appeal to.

Where a dispute as to the right of one of two claimants to certain compensation awarded under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act has been referred to the Civil Court under s. 15 of that Act, a second Appeal will lie to the High Court from the judgment passed in an appeal against the decision of the Court to which the dispute was referred.

IN this case an award of Rs. 69 was made by the Land Registration Officer at Cuttack, in respect of compensation for a share in a piece of land occupied by the compound and building of the office of the Commissioner of that district. Two claimants for the money, Atri Bai and Arnopoorna Bai, having appeared before the Collector, the latter referred the matter to the Munsif of Cuttack under s. 15 of the Land Acquisition Act X of 1870. The Munsif decided in favour of Atri Bai, but this decision was reversed by the District Judge on appeal. Atri Bai appealed to the High Court, where a preliminary objection was taken that no appeal lay.

* Appeal from Appellate Order, No. 386 of 1882, against the order, of J. B. Worgan, Esq., Officiating Judge of Cuttack, dated the 2nd September 1882, reversing the order of Baboo Nilmadhub Shamanta, First Munsif of that District, dated the 31st March 1882.

Prinsep, J.—A preliminary objection has been raised to the hearing of this appeal that the law (s. 39 of the Land Acquisition Act of 1870) does not provide for a second appeal; and that only certain provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, among which the chapter relating to appeals is not to be found, are extended to proceedings under that Act. The case falls [839] under Part IV of the Land Acquisition Act, and relates to the apportionment of the compensation awarded. The limitation of the application of the Code applies only to Part VII. Further it appears to us from the very nature of the dispute between the parties that these proceedings must be regarded as a suit. In the next place s. 39 declares that in cases like the present case "the appeal shall lie in the first instance to the District Judge," from which it would seem that a further appeal was contemplated by the Legislature. In any case, however, having regard to the nature of the proceedings and the powers conferred on us by law in suits, we should not be inclined to limit our jurisdiction without any express words in any law to that effect.

On the merits of the case there is no reason to question the correctness of the conclusion arrived at by the lower Appellate Court.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Execution of decree—Mortgage-decree—Decree on mortgage-bond—Sale of decree—Conveyance—Registration.

A decree-holder purported to sell to A, by private sale, all his right, title, and interest in a mortgage-decree obtained by him in a suit on a mortgage-bond against the mortgagor. The deed of sale was not registered. Afterwards, by a registered deed of sale, A conveyed all his right, title, and interest in the same decree to B.

Held, that the right to execute the decree as a mortgage-decree did not pass to B.

THE facts of this case were as follows: On the 5th of January 1877, one Golab Chand Nowlakha obtained the usual mortgage decree on a mortgage-bond against one Shaikh Imdad Ali. By a deed of sale, dated the 6th of August 1877, this decree was sold [840] by the decree-holder to one Shaikh

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 971 of 1882, against the decree of F. Comley, Esq., Judge of Purnea, dated the 27th March 1882, affirming the decree of S. Wright, Esq., Sub-Judge of that district, dated the 18th November 1881.

Jotee ; this deed of sale was not registered On the 15th of July 1879, by a registered deed of sale, Shaikh Jotee sold the decree to one Koob Lall Chowdhry.

In the meantime, on the 5th of November 1878, one Srinundun Singh, in execution of a money-decree passed in his favour against Imdad Ali on the 12th of August 1878, purchased and entered into possession of the property covered by the mortgage-decree. On the 17th of August 1880, Koob Lall Chowdhry attached the mortgaged property in execution of the mortgage-decree. Srinundun Singh applied for the release of the property from attachment, but this application was dismissed on the 18th of December 1880 ; and on the 7th of March 1881, Srinundun was compelled to deposit Rs. 1,057-1-8 in order to save the property from sale. The plaint in the present suit was filed on the 20th of June 1881, and prayed for a decree setting aside the order of the 18th of December 1880, and for the recovery of the amount of the deposit with interest and costs.

The Subordinate Judge decreed the plaintiff's claim, citing Gopal Narayan v. Trimbak Sadashiv (I. L. R., 1 Bom., 267). On appeal the Judge said :—

“ The Subordinate Judge finds that the transfer of the decree by Golab Chand Nowlakha to Jotee was in consequence of the non-registration of the conveyance deed, a transfer, in effect, of the decree, as a decree, for money alone and that under such a transfer Jotee lost the right of lien against immoveable property declared by the decree. On that point the Subordinate Judge's decision appears to be correct, if the transfer rested solely on that conveyance, for under s. 17, Act III of 1877, that conveyance ought to have been registered. It appears that Golab Chand took out execution of his decree, and had the property in dispute notified for sale to take place on the 6th of August 1877 ; that on that date Golab Chand sold his right under the decree to Jotee, and applied to the Munsif to stay the sale, to strike off the name of the applicant (Golab Chand), decree-holder, and to insert in lieu the name of the purchaser Shaikh Jotee. The order made by the Munsif was : ‘ In accordance with the petition of the decree-holder, let the sale be stopped, and let this case be struck off the file.’ This is not equivalent to an order admitting Jotee to be the assignee representative in the decree proceedings of Golab Chand, and does not bring the case within the exemption clause (i), s. 17, Act III of 1877.”

[841] The District Judge dismissed the appeal with costs. The defendant appealed to the High Court on several grounds to the effect that no registration of the deed of the 6th of August 1877 was necessary ; that Jotee had been placed on the record as decree-holder, and his subsequent registered conveyance passed a good title to the decree ; and that the case came within clause (i) s. 17, Act III of 1877.

Mr. C. Gregory for the Appellant.

Munshi Mahomed Yusuf for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and O’KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by Prinsep, J.—We think that the orders passed by the lower Courts are correct. Golab Chand Nowlakha, defendant No. 5, in 1877, obtained a mortgage decree against Imdad Ali. The plaintiff, in execution of a decree held by another person, has purchased the property hypothecated by that decree. The defendant, Koob Lall, stating that he was the assignee of the decree-holder, then executed the mortgage-decree obtained by Golab Chand and was about to put up for sale a portion of the property previously purchased by the plaintiff, when the plaintiff, in order to protect that property from sale, deposited under protest the money due under the decree. The present suit is to recover the money so paid. It has been found by both the lower Courts that Golab Chand, on the 6th August 1877, sold to one Jotee under an unregistered deed of conveyance, and that Jotee in August 1880 transferred his rights thereunder to Koob Lall by a registered conveyance. Both the Courts have found, and we think rightly, that the title under which Jotee acquired the rights of Golab Chand not being registered, and the registration law requiring that such conveyances should be registered, the title of Koob Lall from Jotee, so far as it relates to the mortgage lien on this property, is defective, inasmuch as it cannot be proved to come from Golab.

We think that the rule recently laid down by a Full Bench of this Court as regards the right of an obligee to recover on an unregistered mortgage bond, should be applied to cases such as that now before us, and that accordingly Koob Lall must be [842] held to have acquired only a money decree entitling him to recover the amount of the decree without any hypothecation of any particular property.

Under such circumstances plaintiff, as purchaser of the property held by Imdad Ali, is entitled to recover the money paid to stay the resale of this property in execution of the decree held by Koob Lall since the rights of the debtor have passed to him, and Koob Lall can enforce no lien on it.

We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Execution of Decree—Sale of immoveable property—Confirmation of sale—Sale certificate—Evidence.

The order confirming a sale of immoveable property in execution of a decree is sufficient to pass the title in the property to the purchaser, and its production is sufficient evidence of the purchaser's title. The production of the sale certificate is not essential.

Doorga Narain Sen v. Baney Madhub Mozoomdar (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 199) followed.

IN this case the Judgment appealed from was as follows :—

“The plaintiffs have brought this suit to recover possession of the property in dispute on the establishment of title as auction-purchasers at a sale in execution of a Civil Court's decree. It appears that the defendants have purchased the same property in execution of a decree for a share of the rent. The plaintiff's purchase is prior to that of the defendants'. I think the sale furd and the proceedings confirming the sale, in the name of the plaintiffs should be received as evidence in the case. The evidence and the circumstances of the case lead me to believe that the property in dispute is covered by the plaintiffs' auction-purchase, and the plaintiffs were in possession of the disputed property, and they paid rents. The receipts filed in the case substantiate their allegation. The appeal will be dismissed."

* Appeal from Appellate-Decree, No. 444 of 1882, against the decree of Baboo Kedar Nath Mozoomdar, Sub-Judge of Midnapore, dated the 31st December 1881, affirming the decree of Baboo Jodigoswar Gupto, Officiating Munsif of Nermal, dated 24th March 1881.

[843] The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Omesh Chunder Bauerjee for the Appellants.

Baboo Bhowany Churn Dutt for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and O'KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by

Prinsep, J.—The main objection taken before us in this case is that the plaintiffs' suit should be dismissed, because they have failed to produce the sale certificate on which they acquired their title. It has nowhere been denied, nor is it disputed before us, that the plaintiffs purchased in an execution sale the right, title and interest of the defendants, judgment-debtors, in the present case. We, therefore, think that this objection is untenable, and in this respect we agree with the judgment of a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Doorga Narain Sen v. Baney Madhub Mozoomdar (I. L. R., 7 Cal. 199), in which it was held that "the order affirming the sale would be sufficient to pass a title to the purchaser; and the certificate which might afterwards be obtained by him would be merely evidence that the property so passed."

We therefore dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

NOTES.

[There was some conflict under the old Code as to when title passed to the purchaser. The C. P. C., 1908, sec. 65, enacts that the property shall be deemed to have vested in the purchaser from the time when the property is sold and not from the time when the sale becomes absolute. Landlord and Tenant—Forfeiture—Waiver by acceptance of rent.

A lease provided that every four years a measurement should be made either by the lessor or by the lessees, and additional rent paid for accretion to the land leased. It then provided for failure on the lessee's part to execute a kabuliat for the excess lands in the following terms: "If at the fixed time stated above we do not take an amin and cause measurement to be made, you will appoint an amin and cause the entire land of the said chur to be measured, and no objection on the ground of our recording or not, our presence on such measurement chitta shall be entertained, and we will duly file a separate dowl kabuliat for the excess rent that will be found [844] after deducting the settled land of the dowl executed by us from the land settled therein. If we do not, we will be deprived of our right of obtaining a settlement of such excess land, as well as of the land which will accrete in future to the said chur, and no objection thereto on our part shall be entertained." In a suit by the lessor, alleging that in 1876 he had caused a measurement to be made, and had called on the lessees to execute a kabuliat for the rent of certain excess lands, and praying that the lessees might be ejected, the lessees pleaded that the lessor had waived his right to enforce the forfeiture by subsequent receipt of rent. It appeared that payments had been made to the lessor by the lessees, which were accepted as rent, but were kept in suspense subject to payment by the lessees of the "remaining amount."

Held, that such a qualification did not make the payments anything else than payments of rent and that the lessor had waived his right to insist on re-entry on the lessees' failure to measure the lands, or execute a kabuliat when called on to do so.

Davenport v. The Queen (L. R., 3 App. Cas., 115) followed.

Baboo Rashbehary Ghose for the Respondents.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (CUNNINGHAM and MACLEAN, JJ.), which was delivered by Cunningham, J.—In the suit out of which these appeals arise it is admitted that the plaintiff's father leased to the defendants on 30th Cheyt 1265 (12th April 1859) 4 deores 10½ kanis of culturable land at an annual rent of Rs. 335-4.

The lease provided that every fourth year a measurement should be made, either by the lessor or by the lessees, and additional rent paid for accretions to the land leased in 1859. It then provided for failure on the lessees' part to execute a kabuliat for the excess lands in the following terms:—

"If at the fixed time stated above, we do not take an amin and cause measurement to be made, you will appoint an amin and cause the entire land of the said chur to be measured, and no objection on the ground of our recording or not our presence on such measurement chitta shall be entertained, and we will duly file a separate dowl kabuliat for the excess land that will be found [845] after deducting the settled land of the dowl executed by us from the land stated therein. If we do not, we will be deprived of our right of obtaining a settlement of such excess land as well as of the land which will accrete in future to the said chur; and no objection thereto on our part shall be entertained."

It is alleged in this suit that the plaintiff caused a measurement to be made in 1282 (1875-76), which resulted in a notice dated 31st December 1876, calling on defendants to execute a kabuliat for rent of 9 deores 10 kanis 6½ gundas of excess lands, and the plaintiffs called on the Court to enforce the forfeiture entailed by defendant's failure to execute the kabuliat by ejecting the defendants, or assessing rent on the excess lands.

The defendants denied the fact of measurement, and notice to execute a kabuliat, and in the 9th paragraph of their written statement pleaded that plaintiff had waived his right to enforce the forfeiture by subsequent receipt of rent.

The lower Court has found that the plaintiff measured the land and gave notice to the defendants as alleged, and that there was an excess by accretion of 8 deores 12 kanis and 3 gundas of land. It also found that plaintiff had not waived the right to enforce the forfeiture by subsequent receipt of rent.

But the lower Court, considering that the plaintiff having claimed relief in an alternative form, had really left it to the Court to do substantial equity, decided that the plaintiff should take the rent which it assessed, and should not get possession.

Both sides appeal—plaintiffs in suit No. 228 urging that they are entitled to possession, and that they have not forfeited or waived their right; the defendants in No. 243 questioned the findings of the lower Court, and urged that the decree assessing rent was bad.

Vakils were heard on both sides, and in the end they left it to the Court to decide whether the plaintiffs were entitled to insist on khas possession. The plaintiff's vakil referred the Court to a decision of another Bench in appeal from original decree No. 276 of 1871. That was a case between the plaintiff and other parties. It was founded upon a kabuliat identical in terms as to measurement and forfeiture with the kabuliat in this [846] case, and we find that in that case the prayer was for khas possession only, and there was no plea of waiver by receipt of rent. We do not think, therefore, that we are in any way bound to consider that decision, which is under appeal to Her Majesty in Council.

After careful consideration of the case we think that we ought to affirm the decision of the lower Court, and dismiss the plaintiff's appeal on the ground that by receipt of rent in the years 1275, 1276, 1277, 1281, 1282, 1283, 1284, and 1286, for excess lands the plaintiff waived his right to insist on re-entry on defendants' failure to measure the lands, or execute a kabuliat when called on to do so in Pous 1283.

It appears that in each of these years the defendants made an undisputed payment of Rs. 150, which was accepted as rent, but was kept in suspense subject to payment by the defendants of the "remaining amounts." We are decidedly of opinion that such a qualification did not make these payments anything else than payments of rent, and we think that we may be guided on the effect of these payments by the opinion of the Judicial Committee in Davenport v. The Queen (L. R. 3 App. Cas., 115), to which the defendants' vakil referred us. Their Lordships there remark at pages 131-132: "Where money is paid and received as rent under a lease, a mere protest that it is accepted conditionally and without prejudice to a right to a prior forfeiture cannot countervail the fact of such receipt." In the present case the plaintiff received rent after the defendants had incurred a forfeiture—not indeed conditionally and without prejudice to the forfeiture, but unconditionally and without prejudice to his claim to a larger amount.

The defendants' vakil did not press us with Appeal No. 243. We, therefore, dismiss both these appeals, and under the circumstances direct that both sides bear their own costs in this Court.

Appeals dismissed.

Bengal Excise Act (VII of 1878), ss 15, 53, 60, 61 - Sale by servant of licensed vendor- Cooly employed by servant-Reference to High Court—Revisional jurisdiction.

The servant of a licensed vendor sold eight quart bottles of country spirit, and employed a cooly to carry them as he directed. The servant was convicted under s. 60, Beng. Act VII of 1878; and the cooly was convicted under s. 61 of the same Act. It was suggested that the servant should have been convicted under s. 53, and that the cooly had committed no offence.

Held, that the conviction of the cooly was illegal, and must be set aside.

Held, also, that the servant was properly convicted, and whether under s. 60 or s. 53 was immaterial.

Queen v. Ishan Chunder Shaha (19 W. R., Cr., 34); and Empress v. Baney Madhub Shaw (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 207; 10 C. L. R., 389) followed.

The necessity for altering a conviction from one section to another for cognate offences, when the accused has not been prejudiced by any such error, is no sufficient ground for a reference to the Court of Revision.

THIS was a reference from the Sessions Judge of Tipperah under s. 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The terms of the Reference were as follows :-

Accused No. 1 has been convicted under s. 60, and accused No. 2 under s. 61 of Beng. Act VII 1878. The former sold eight quart bottles of country spirit, and the latter had them in his possession, i.e., carried them as a cooly by direction of accused No. 1.

It is contended that the conviction of both the accused is illegal, because accused No. 1 was not a licensed vendor, and accused No. 2 might lawfully have had 12 quart bottles in his possession.

With regard to the case of accused No. 1 he is not a licensed vendor, but he is servant to a licensed retail vendor, and sold the liquor as such. Section 60 applies only to sale by licensed vendors, accused ought not therefore to have been convicted under that section. It may be that he has committed an offence punishable under s. 53, and if an appeal lay to this Court, I might perhaps under s. 423 of the Criminal Procedure alter the finding [848] maintaining the sentence, but as the case is not appealable I cannot do so, and I cannot direct the lower Court to enquire into the offence punishable under s. 53, because I could only make such order in case the accused had been discharged; s. 436, Criminal Procedure. I think I ought, therefore, to submit the case of accused No. 1 to the High Court to be dealt with under s. 439. I am inclined to think that the proper course would have been to prosecute, not him, but his master, under s. 60.

As to accused No. 2 the conviction seems unsustainable. Section 61 of the Excise Act must be read with s. 15, in which the quantity specified is 12 quart bottles. It is stated that the Board of Revenue have made an order, as they are empowered under s. 15, reducing the quantity to six quart bottles, but my attention has been directed to the case of Empress v. Kola Lalang (I.L.R., 8 Cal. 214), in which it is shown that persons, who are not licensed vendors (and it is admitted that accused No. 2 is not one) do not commit an offence by possessing a less quantity than 12 quart bottles, though the quantity they possess may be greater than that authorized by the Board by virtue of the power conferred on them by s. 15. I would, therefore, recommend that the conviction of accused No. 2, who seems an innocent party, be set aside, and the fine ordered to be refunded to him.

* Criminal Reference, No. 49 of 1883, from the order made by R. Towers, Esq., Sessions Judge of Tipperah, dated the 25th April 1883.

No one appeared to argue the case.

Prinsep, J.—The second defendant must clearly be acquitted on the authority of the judgment of this Court in the case of Empress v. Kola Lalang (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 214) in which we concur.

The first defendant has in our opinion been properly convicted whether under s. 60 or s. 53 is immaterial—see Queen v. Ishan Chunder Shaha (19 W. R., Cr., 34); Empress v. Baney Madhub Shaw (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 207; 10 C. L. R., 389). We would further observe that for reasons stated by the Sessions Judge himself, he need not have referred the case of this prisoner. A necessity for altering a conviction from one section to another for cognate offences when the accused has not been prejudiced by any such error is no sufficient ground for a reference to the Court of Revision.

Master and Servant—Criminal act of Servant—Non-liability of Master—Indian Ports' Act (XII of 1875), s. 22.

The servants of a contractor who had engaged to discharge ballast from a ship lying in the port of Calcutta, threw the ballast into the river within the limits of the port, and thus committed an offence under s. 22 of the Indian Ports' Act (Act XII of 1875). It did not appear that the contractor had abetted the offence.

Held, that he was not, in the absence of proof of abetment, liable for the acts of his servants.

Baboo Umbica Churn Bose for the Appellant.

The Standing Counsel (Mr. Phillips) and Mr. Adkin for the Crown.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and TOTTENHAM, JJ.), which was delivered by

McDonell, J.—The appellant has been convicted before the Chief Presidency Magistrate of an offence against s. 22 of Act XII of 1875, by improperly discharging ballast from the ship Ben Nevis, by the boats of Bishto Manjhi and Nufur Manjhi, by throwing it into the river within the Port of Calcutta, and has been sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 250. The amount of the fine entitles the accused to appeal to this Court.

* Criminal Appeal, No. 155 of 1883 against the order of F. J. Marsden, Esq., Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, dated the 21st February 1883.

In our opinion the conviction is bad in law, for the facts proved or admitted do not establish any offence under the Act against the appellant. The first clause of s. 22 prohibits the casting of ballast or rubbish in the port without lawful excuse.

The next clause prescribes a penalty for whoever by himself or another so casts or throws the same, and for the master of any vessel from which the same is cast or thrown. It seems to us that to warrant the conviction under this section of a person, not being master of a vessel from which ballast is thrown, it must be shown that the accused person, if he did not himself throw the ballast or [850] rubbish into the port, intentionally caused somebody else to commit that offence.

In this case all that is proved or admitted against the appellant is that he made an agreement to remove the ballast from the ship Ben Nevis; that he engaged boats for that purpose; and that the ballast was removed from the ship in those boats. The boatmen, instead of landing the ballast at the proper place, threw it into the river within the limits of the port. They were arrested, convicted, and fined. Proceedings were subsequently taken against the appellant under the same section, when the Magistrate held him "liable for his servants' act," and accordingly convicted and sentenced him. We cannot bring ourselves to accept this doctrine as admissible in dealing with a person accused of an offence, unless his liability for the acts of another is specifically declared by statute. The learned Standing Counsel who has supported the conviction admits that in a criminal trial the doctrine laid down by the Magistrate in this case would not be applicable, but he endeavours to distinguish this case from a criminal matter by describing it as quasi-criminal, or as one relating not to an "offence" but to a mere breach of rule. And in such a case he submits that knowledge or intention on the part of the person who is accused in respect of something done by other persons is not essential.

We cannot, however, apprehend the distinction so suggested as entitling a Criminal Court to place a person accused of what is described as a quasi-criminal act at a disadvantage from which one charged with serious crime would be protected, viz., being held responsible for the acts of another without any proof of abetment or connivance on his part, and, in the absence of any statutory provision, fixing him with such responsibility. We observe that Act XII of 1875 in Chapter VIII refers to breaches of it as "offences," makes them triable by a Magistrate, and provides for the enforcement of penalties on conviction. The trial then is, we apprehend, a criminal trial, and the same principles will apply to it as to other criminal trials.

If the Legislature had intended to make persons in appellant's position criminally liable for acts done by persons employed [851] by them without proof of connivance, it would surely have provided for this in the Act. The very section (22) and following sections do enact that the master of any vessel shall be liable to be punished for acts done on board in breach of the rules laid down, though they may possibly be done without his knowledge, or even against his orders. This specific creation of criminal liability as against the master shews that without it he would not be liable for an act not done, or expressly permitted by himself.

We find nothing in the Act which renders the appellant liable to punishment for the acts done by others not proved to have been by his abetment or connivance. We therefore set aside the conviction and direct that the fine, if paid, be refunded.

For these reasons we set aside the convictions and sentences in appeals Nos. 156 and 157.

Convictions set aside.

Registration Act (III of 1877), ss. 74, 77—Refusal to execute deed—Suit to compel registration.

If the non-registration of a deed has resulted from the refusal of one of the parties to it, to execute it, that matter must be enquired into by the Registrar, as directed by s. 71 of the Registration Act, before any right to sue under s. 77 can arise, and unless the requirements of the Act have been complied with no cause of action arises under s. 77.

Edun v. Mahomed Siddik (ante p. 150) followed.

THIS was a suit under s. 77 of the Registration Act (III of 1877) to enforce registration of a kobala. The defendant denied execution. An attempt had been made to register the deed before the Sub-Registrar who refused to register it upon the ground [852] that it had not been presented by a proper person, and that his registration fees had been not paid. An appeal was preferred to the Registrar who held that the Sub-Registrar was right in refusing registration. The present suit was then instituted praying for a declaration that the defendant had executed the deed and for an order directing the Sub-Registrar to register it within thirty days. It was admitted that the defendant had not appeared before the Registrar. The Munsif dismissed the suit. On appeal this decision was reversed. The defendant appealed to the High Court.

Mr. O'Kenedy and Baboo Anukul Chunder Sen for the Appellant.

Baboo Hem Chunder Benerjee and Baboo Lall Mohan Dass for the Respondent.

The following Judgments were delivered:—

Cunningham, J.—The order of the Sub-Registrar, which was the commencement of the proceedings out of which this suit has arisen, sets forth certain circumstances which occurred before him in connection with the application for registration. It then went on to state that Moheem, the person applying for registration, had stated that it was not his deed, and that he did not pay the fees on being asked for them. It then continued "the deed has not agreeably to s. 42, clause 7 of the rule in force been presented by a proper person, and the fees have not according to s. 66 been paid. Therefore, the registration of the deed is rejected."

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 238 of 1882, against the decree of Baboo Nobin Chunder Gangooli, Second Sub-Judge of Dacca, dated the 9th December 1881, reversing the Decree of Baboo Kalidhun Chatterjee, Second Munsif of Moonshigunge, dated the 7th February 1881.

From this order there was an appeal to the Registrar who passed the following order: "The rural Sub-Registrar was right in refusing registration, as he was unable to satisfy himself that it had been presented by a person authorized to do so, and because the proper fee was not paid. Appeal dismissed."

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that upon these orders the present suit could not be brought, or that, if brought, all that could be enquired into would be the question whether or not the Sub-Registrar and Registrar were right in holding that a proper presentation of the deed for registration had not been made.

On behalf of the respondent it has been urged that, inasmuch as there had been a refusal by the Sub-Registrar to register, and as [853] that refusal had been appealed against to the Registrar the respondent was at liberty to bring this action under s. 77, and in that action to raise the whole question whether or not the deed had been executed by the defendant, and whether it ought not therefore to be registered.

I do not think that this contention is right. It appears to me that the contention of the appellant is sound, that if the non-registration of the deed has resulted from the refusal of one of the parties to it to execute it, that matter must be enquired into by the Registrar, as directed by s. 74, before any right to sue under s. 77 would arise; and my opinion is, following the ruling of this Court in Edun v. Mahomed Siddik (ante, p. 150), that unless the requirements of the Act have been complied with, no cause of action arises under s. 77.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the decree of the lower Appellate Court must be set aside, and that of the original Court dismissing the plaintiff's suit restored with costs throughout.

Maclean, J.—In my opinion this suit cannot be maintained, either under s. 77 of the Registration Act or under the general provisions of the Code.

To maintain this suit it was indispensable, I think, that the requirements of the Act as to presentation of the document by some one executing it should have been found; but this has not been done. The Subordinate Judge does indeed find that the defendant went in a boat to the Sub-Registrar, but he evidently went to the place where the Sub-Registrar's office is, for it is common to both plaintiff and defendant that the defendant did not appear before the Sub-Registrar. There is, therefore, no finding that the defendant appeared before the Sub-Registrar. He could not, therefore, register, and was bound to refuse to register the document; and the first Court could not properly direct that a document not presented according to law should be registered.

I think, on the authority of the case of Edun v. Mahomed Siddik (ante, p. 150) the appeal should be decreed and plaintiff's suit dismissed with all costs.

Appeal allowed.

Hindu Law, Gift--Possession retained by donor--Transfer of possession—Symbolical transfer.

A gift by a Hindu, unaccompanied either by possession on the part of the donee or any symbolical act, such as handing over documents of title, or permitting the donee to receive rents, is not in itself a valid transaction, even though the deed of gift be registered.

Baboo Rasbehari Ghose for the Appellant.

Baboo Durga Mohan Dass and Munshi Sarajul Islam for the Respondents.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (CUNNINGHAM and MACLEAN, JJ.) which was delivered by

Cunningham, J.—In this case the question raised is, whether the gift of a house in a case in which the donor reserved to himself the right of remaining in the house for the term of his life, and which was unaccompanied by any act of physical delivery, or any symbolical act by which physical delivery could be held to be implied, is valid.

No case supporting the view of the respondent that such a gift is valid has been brought to our knowledge.

In the present instance the donees appear to have never in any way had delivery of the house, and the only incident which can be regarded as symbolical of delivery is registration of the deed of gift.

With regard to registration it was contended by the respondent that the Full Bench Ruling in Narain Chunder Cuckerbutty v. Dattaram Roy (I.L.R. 8 Cal. 597) had laid down that possession was necessary neither for a sale nor a gift. We find, however, that the learned [855] Judges in that case confined themselves strictly to a case where there has been a sale of property for valuable consideration, and where the document evidencing that sale has been registered. Their Lordships appear to have referred to the general course of dealings with regard to property, and to have considered that the general usage of the province had had the effect of dispensing with actual delivery in the case of sales for valuable consideration. No case, however, has gone the length, so far as we are aware, of saying that a gift by a Hindu, unaccompanied either by possession on the part of the donee or any symbolical act, such as handing over documents of title, or by permitting the donee to receive rents, or other like act, is in itself a valid transaction, even though the deed of gift be registered. On the other hand, we think that the decision in Kishto Soondery Debia v. Ranee Kishto Motee (Marsh., 367), must be taken as laying down that in such a case as this no valid binding transaction has taken place, until the donee has either actually or symbolically taken possession of the gift.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 314 of 1882, against the decree of Baboo Gunga Churn Sircar, Sub-Judge of Dacca, dated the 9th December 1881, reversing the decree of Baboo Kalidhun Chatterjee, Second Munsif of Munshigunj, dated the 17th May 1881.

We think, therefore, that the decree of the lower Appellate Court must be reversed, and that of the original Court restored with costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 2nd March, 1883.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY.

Chunder Narain Singh.....Decree-holder

Kishen Chand Golecha.....Judgment-debtor.*

Landlord and Tenant—Arrears of rent—Decree for arrears of rent Sale for arrears of rent—Insolvency—Official Assignee—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, ss. 59 and 60—Insolvent Act 11 and 12 Vict. c. 21.

A decree for arrears of rent of an under-tenure was obtained against a tenant who became an insolvent, and whose tenure became vested in the Official Assignee by virtue of the provisions of the Indian Insolvent Act, 11 and 12 Vict., c. 21. An application was made under ss. 59 and 60 of the Rent Law, Beng. Act VIII of 1869, for an order that the tenure should be sold for its own arrears. The Official Assignee objected to the sale, and contended that the decree-holder's only right was to prove in the insolvency for the amount of his debt.

[856] Held, that, whether the arrears of rent became due before or after the insolvency of the judgment-debtor, the decree-holder was entitled to sell the tenure in execution of his decree.

THIS was an application for execution made in the Court of the District Judge of Beerbhoom. In rejecting the application the Judge said :—

“This case is similar to execution case No. 82 of 1880. A decree was obtained in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Moorshedabad for arrears of rent, against the Official Assignee on behalf of the insolvent Kishen Chand Golecha. This decree has been transferred to this Court with a certificate of non-satisfaction, and filed here. Execution of this decree has been sued out here, and the under tenure, in respect of which such arrears were due, has been attached. The Official Assignee now raises an objection to the sale of that property on the ground that all properties of the insolvent had by orders of the High Court been previously vested in him, and that this Court has no jurisdiction.” It seems the suit had been instituted against the insolvent as well as the Official Assignee.

* Appeal from Original Order, No. 304 of 1882, against the order of S.H.C. Taylor, Esq., Judge of Beerbhoom dated the 1st September 1882.

The District Judge refused the application, and the decree-holder appealed on the grounds (1), that under the Rent Law the arrears of rent are a charge on the tenure, and, therefore, the sale should have been allowed; (2), that the tenure was liable to be sold for its own arrears, no matter into whose hands it had passed.

Baboo Gurn Dass Banerjee and Baboo Bhoobun Mohun Dass for the Appellant.

Baboo Saligram Singh for the Respondent.

Prinsep, J.—In this case the plaintiff, having obtained a decree against the Official Assignee for arrears of rent due on a patni tenure, attempted to sue out execution by attachment and sale of the tenure for which the arrears are due. The Official Assignee objected and stated that the landlord was not entitled to sell the tenure, but must come in like any other creditor. Neither of the Courts state whether the arrears said to have been due accrued before the property of the insolvent vested in the Official Assignee, [867] or while it was under his charge. If the Official Assignee neglected to disclaim or get rid of the lease, he would become liable for the rent due after the property of the insolvent debtor vested in him. This is clear from Ex parte Davis (L. R. 3 Ch. D., 463) and Ex parte Dressler (L. R. 9 Ch. D., 252). But even if the arrears were due from the insolvent before he took the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors' Act, we think that the landlord was entitled to sell the tenure. This very point was raised before the Madras High Court in the case of Chinna Subbaraya Mudali v. Kandaswami Reddi (I.L.R., 1 Mad., 59). Mr. Justice HOLLOWAY, who delivered the judgment of the Court, said : * * * "It appears to me no interest in the particular property in question vested in the Official Assignee by the vesting order. The interest of the potta-holder is one dependent upon his payment of rent, and if he does not pay, his right to hold ceases and becomes saleable for whatever it is worth for the arrears. It is a case of a contract, a contract of letting, and the Official Assignee must have expressed his election to take it and must have taken it cum onere, otherwise he acquired no right or interest in the land." In this view we concur, and we think that the lower Court was wrong in not allowing the under-tenure to be sold.

The appeal is allowed with costs. The case will go back to the lower Court with a direction to proceed with the execution.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 2nd March, 1883.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY.

Nilmadhub Chuckerbutty..... Judgment-debtor

Ramsodoy Ghose.....Decree-holder.*

Construction of decree—Limitation.*

A consent decree for Rs. 350 directed payment of the money by fourteen half-yearly instalments of Rs. 25 each, in Cheyt and Assin of each year, the first instalment to be paid in the month of Cheyt 1283 (March-April 1877). [858] The decree contained a provision that in default of payment of any one instalment, the execution-creditor should have the option of executing the decree for the whole amount remaining unpaid. Default was made in payment of the first instalment, but the judgment-debtor paid up (not on due date) the instalment which fell due up to, and including Assin 1285 (October-November 1878), when he stopped making any payments. On the 26th of November 1881 the decree-holder applied for execution in respect of all sums then remaining unpaid under the decree. The District Judge allowed execution to issue for all sums which had fallen due within three years previously to the date of the application for execution, but refused to allow execution to issue in respect of the instalments not then due.

Held, that the execution-creditor must be considered to have waived his right to execute the decree for the whole amount, but was entitled under the decree to realize any instalments which were still due.

THIS was an application for execution of decree. The Court of First Instance rejected the application. This decision was reversed by the District Judge. The judgment-debtor then appealed to the High Court. The following is the judgment appealed from :-

The question which has to be decided in this case is, whether execution is barred by the law of limitation. The decree which bore date the 26th of February 1877 directed the payment of Rs. 350 by instalments, viz., Rs. 25 in Cheyt 1283 (March-April 1877). In Assin (October-November) and Cheyt of each year from 1284 to 1289, Rs. 25, and in Assin 1290, Rs. 25. The decree provided, further, that in case of default in the payment of any one instalment the whole should be realized in execution. Although the language of the decree about the penalty is a little obscure, yet there can be very little doubt that the intention of the parties was, that in case of default in the payment of any one instalment the whole amount, which would remain unpaid, should be realized at once in execution.

According to the decree-holder, the first default took place in Cheyt 1283, but he went on receiving payments, notwithstanding that there were successive defaults. Up to the Assin kist of 1285 the debtor has paid, and the remaining amounts are yet due.

* Appeal from Appellate Order No. 249 of 1882, against the order of Baboo Brojendro Coomar Seal, Judge of Bancoora, dated the 26th May 1882, reversing the order of Baboo Tarapronno Ghose, Munsiff of Katulpore, dated the 25th March 1882.

The decree-holder considered that every default would give him a fresh start, and so on the 26th November 1881, (and not on the 11th November as the first Court supposed) the decree-holder applied for the realization of the whole amount yet due.

The first Court held that the decree-holder having come to Court after the expiration of three years from the end of Cheyt 1283, execution was barred. The Munsiff refers to Art. 75* of Schedule II of the Limitation Act, but that article has nothing to do with execution applications. The case has to be decided by reference to the 6th Clause of Art. 179 of Schedule II.

[859] I have carefully read the case cited by the appellant on the one hand, Asmatullah Dalal v. Kally Churn Mitter (I.L.R. 7 Cal. 56) and that quoted by the respondent, Ugrah Nath v. Laganmani (I. L. R. 4 All. 83). The case last cited does not help the respondent. There, the decree provided that in case of default possession should be obtained, and inasmuch as the decree-holder had not come within three years, it was ruled that he was not entitled to get possession. Similarly it may be held in this case, as it was held in Ugrah Nath v. Laganmani (I. L. R. 4 All. 83) that the decree-holder not having come within three years from the first default, he could not pray for the realization of the whole amount; but to use the language of the High Court in Asmatullah Dalal v. Kally Churn Mitter (I. L. R. 7 Cal. 56), "we think that the decree-holder is still entitled to the benefit of Clause 6 of Article 179 as respects any instalments ordered in the decree, and which fell due on dates not exceeding three years before the application was filed."

The decree-holder is certainly not entitled to take out execution with respect to amounts which have not fallen due. It was also urged by the appellant that the payment made by the debtor was a step in aid of execution. That is a wrong view of the meaning of the phrase, "step taken in aid of execution." The judgment of the first Court is set aside, and the records of the case are sent back to the Court below, in order that the decree-holder may be allowed to amend his application for execution in accordance with the view set forth above.

The judgment-debtor appealed on the grounds (1) that the Judge was wrong in allowing execution to issue in respect of instalments which had fallen due within three years; (2) that execution was barred when not issued within three years of the first default in Cheyt 1283; (3) that the Court should not have allowed the decree-holder to amend his application.

Baboo Bama Churn Bannerjee for the Appellant.

Baboo Rajender Nath Bose for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and O'KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by

Prinsep, J.—In this case the decree, which was drawn up by consent of parties, declares that the decretal amount should be paid in instalments,

* [Art. 75 :—

Description of suit.	Period of limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
On a promissory note or bond payable by instalments, which provides that, if default be made in payment of one instalment, the whole shall be due.	Three years. ...	When the first default is made, unless where the payee or obligee waives the benefit of the provision, and then when fresh default is made in respect of which there is no such waiver.]

namely, Rs. 25 in Cheyt 1283, in Assin and Cheyt of each year from 1284 to 1289, Rs. 25, and in Assin [860] 1290, Rs. 25. It also provides that the decree-holder on default of payment of any instalment may execute the decree for the whole amount not paid. In Cheyt 1283 a default was made; but notwithstanding three instalments were afterwards received by the judgment-creditor.

The question now is, whether the application to execute the decree having been filed more than three years after Cheyt 1283, when the entire amount could be realised in execution on failure to pay an instalment, execution is not barred by limitation, or whether it can be executed for the amount of the remaining instalments within three years from the time when each became due.

The Munsiff dismissed the application.

We have had the decree read out to us, and, though it is not expressed in as clear and precise language as we would expect to be used in a document of this nature, we think that, on a proper consideration of that document, the decree-holder had, on default of payment of any instalment, a mere election to enlarge his power, and instead of executing the instalment decree, to execute the decree for the whole amount, and at his option proceed to realise the whole amount due. This clause in the decree which enlarged his power was made solely for the protection and benefit of the decree-holder. It does not infringe on any public right or public policy, or affect the right of any third party, and there was nothing to prevent the judgment-creditor's waiving any advantage that he might obtain under it. In the present case he never exercised the election to realise the whole amount, but on the contrary received instalments due subsequent to the default. He must therefore be held to have waived his right to execute the decree for the whole amount, but he is entitled under the decree to realize instalments still due. Art. 179, cl. 6 does not apply to such a decree.

We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Golam Abed.....Defendant

Toolseeram Bera.....Plaintiff.*

Absconding of accused—Attachment by Magistrate—Execution of decree——Sale in execution of decree—Sale by Magistrate—Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1872), ss. 172, 173.

A, having been accused of an offence under the Indian Penal Code, absconded, and his property was on the 7th of August 1878 attached by the Magistrate under s. 172 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, Act X of 1872. While the property was so under attachment, it was attached by B in execution of a money decree against A, and sold on the 15th of January 1879, B being the purchaser. On the 21st of April 1880, the Magistrate sold the property to C. It did not appear whether the time fixed by the Magistrate's proclamation for A's appearance had expired at the date of the sale to B.

Held, in a suit for possession by B against C, that the title obtained by C under the Magistrate's sale was superior to the title (if any) obtained by B at the sale in execution of the money-decree.

Semble, that after the date of the attachment by the Magistrate under s. 172 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and during its continuance, no title could be conferred by an attachment and sale subsequently made in execution of a money-decree.

THIS was a suit for possession of certain plots of land. The judgment appealed from was as follows :—

It appears that the property in dispute belonged to two brothers, Boidonath and Kasinath, who had equal shares in it. Boidonath, who was accused of an offence under the Penal Code, absconded, and the property in dispute was attached by the Magistrate on the 11th of August 1878, under s. 172 of the Civil Procedure Code. During the subsistence of this attachment the plaintiff (respondent) attached the property for debts due, from both Boidonath and Kasinath, and sold and purchased it himself on the 15th of January 1879. The Magistrate then subsequently sold the right, title and interest of Boidonath (which was only a moiety share), and the appellant (Sheik Golam Abed) purchased it on the 21st of April 1880. The question is whether the plaintiff's purchase of Boidonath's share can be held good after the attachment made by the Magistrate under s. 172 [862] of the Criminal Procedure Code. It was contended that after attachment by the Magistrate the property should be considered to have been at the disposal of the Government, and, therefore, the plaintiff had no right to attach and sell it in execution of his decree. Reading s. 172, it appears to me that the property which was attached was not to be considered at the disposal of Government as soon as it was attached, but when the time specified in the proclamation for the absent person to appear expired.

In this case it does not appear whether the time fixed for Boidonath's appearance expired before or after the plaintiff's sale, and, therefore, I cannot say that the property was at the disposal of Government at the time when the plaintiff purchased it. The defendant ought to have shewn that a proclamation was issued before the plaintiff's purchase, and that the time specified in it for Boidonath's appearance expired before the plaintiff's purchase. I think, therefore there is no ground for interfering with the lower Court's judgment, and therefore it is dismissed with costs.

The defendant appealed to the High Court on the grounds (1) that nothing passed to the plaintiff at his sale; (2) that the defendant was entitled to priority over the plaintiff; (3) that the lower Court misconstrued s. 172; (4) that the lower Court was wrong in holding that the defendant was bound to show that a proclamation had issued before the plaintiff's purchase.

Moonshi Serajul Islam for the Appellant.

No one appeared for the Respondent.

Prinsep, J.—The property, which is the subject of the present appeal, was attached by the Magistrate under s. 172 * of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1872) in consequence of the proprietor Boidonath Dutt absconding when accused of committing a criminal offence. The date of the attachment is stated to be the 7th of August 1878. Subsequently a third person, who held a decree against Boidonath Dutt, proceeded to execute it, and attached the same property, which was sold to the plaintiff on the 15th of January 1879. Notwithstanding these proceedings the attachment under the order of the Magistrate still continued, and it appears that, as Boidonath Dutt did not appear within the period specified in the proclamation issued under s. 171, the [863] property at once became (to use the terms of s. 172) "at the disposal of Government." We understand by this expression that it came under the absolute control of Government to dispose of, or deal with it, in whatever manner might seem most appropriate and convenient. In April 1880, the Magistrate at a public sale sold the rights of Government to the defendant. We have therefore in the present suit to determine which of these sales conferred the title to this property.

The Subordinate Judge has given the plaintiff a decree as against the defendant, because in his opinion the defendant ought to have shown that the proclamation had issued before the plaintiff's purchase, and that the time specified in it for Boidonath's appearance expired before the plaintiff's purchase.

These reasons appear to us to be altogether unsound, for the Subordinate Judge should have presumed in accordance with s. 114 (c) of the Evidence Act that the judicial acts of the Magistrate were regularly performed, that is to say that, unless the contrary was shown, the proclamation under s. 171 had been properly issued; that Boidonath did not appear within the time specified in immovable, or both, belonging to the person so absconding or concealing himself. Such order shall authorize the attachment of any property within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate of the district in whose district it is made; and it shall authorize the attachment of any property without the jurisdiction of the Magistrate of the district, when endorsed by the Magistrate of the district in which such property is situated.

The attachment under this section shall, if the property ordered to be attached be land paying revenue to Government, be made through the Collector of the District in which the land is situate, and, in all other cases, by seizure under the order of the Magistrate having jurisdiction; or by the appointment of a manager and receiver; or by an order prohibiting the payment of rent to the absent person; as such Magistrate deems proper.

If the absent person does not appear within the time specified in the proclamation, the property under attachment shall be at the disposal of Government, but shall not be sold until the expiration of six months, unless it is of a perishable nature, or such Magistrate considers that the sale would be for the benefit of the owner.]

the proclamation; and that the property having become at the disposal of Government, the Magistrate transferred it to the defendant. As regards the title of the defendant it appears to us that, so long as the attachment by the Magistrate continued, no title could be conferred by any attachment subsequently made. Section 172 provides that if the person to whom the property belongs does not appear within the specified period, his property (not his right, title and interest) shall be at the disposal of Government, and from the terms of s. 173 it would appear that if the property has been sold, although the person to whom it belonged might be able to show to the satisfaction of the Magistrate that he was not at fault, and therefore not properly responsible for the sale, even then the sale is not to be set aside, and the property restored, but the proceeds of the sale are to be made over to the proprietor.

Under these circumstances the suit must be dismissed, the orders of the Courts below being set aside with costs in all the Courts.

Appeal allowed.

A and B were taluqdars of a certain village, each having an eight annas share. A certain ryot held a jote within the village, in respect of which he paid his rent separately—eight annas to A and eight annas to B. A served a notice of enhancement on the ryot, but the notice was signed by A only, and it did not appear that the consent of B had been previously obtained. A afterwards instituted a suit for arrears of rent at the enhanced rate, making B a defendant to the suit.

Held, that the notice of enhancement was sufficient to maintain a suit so framed.

IN this case it appeared that village Baruipara, in pergunnah Mahomedshahi station Nowpara in the District of Nuddea, was the patni taluk of the plaintiffs and one Shoshi Bhusun Sircar, the share of the plaintiffs being eight annas. Komaraddi Mundul was a ryot having a right of occupancy within the taluk, and who paid his rent separately—eight annas to the plaintiffs and eight annas to Shoshi Bhusun Sircar. The plaintiffs served a written notice of enhancement on Komaraddi Mundul, but this notice was not signed by Shoshi Bhusun Sircar, nor had his consent to serve it been previously obtained. Komaraddi neglected to pay the enhanced rent required, and the plaintiffs brought the present suit against him for arrears of rent at the enhanced rates mentioned in the notice. Shoshi Bhusun Sircar was made a party defendant to the suit. The Court of first Instance dismissed the suit on the authority of Guni Mahomed v. Moran (I. L. [865] The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court on the ground that the lower Court was wrong in declaring the notice insufficient.

Baboo Mohini Mohun Roy and Baboo Kali Churn Banerjee for the Appellants.

Baboo Sreenath Banerjee for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (CUNNINGHAM and MACLEAN, JJ.) was delivered by Cunningham, J.—This was a suit for rent at an enhanced rate. The defence raised was that the notice of enhancement was signed, not by the whole body of landlords, but by the plaintiffs alone, who held an eight annas share, and separately collected their rent from the defendants. The question we have to decide in second appeal is, whether this notice was good. This question has, in our opinion, been decided in the affirmative by the observations of the Chief Justice in the Full Bench case of Chuni Singh v. Hera Mahto (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 633). We understand the meaning of the Chief Justice to be that a suit by a portion of the co-sharers for rent at an enhanced rate may be brought, provided the other co-sharers are joined in the suit either as plaintiffs or defendants; and that, in such a case, notice may be duly given by that portion of the co-sharers by which the suit is instituted. We think, therefore, that the question is no longer open to discussion. The present appeal must accordingly be admitted, and the case remanded to the Court of First Instance for trial on the merits.

Appeal allowed and case remanded.

Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 17—Lease or agreement to lease.

In a suit for possession of certain property and for the execution of a pottah, it appeared that two of the defendants had executed an agreement which was duly registered, by which they acknowledged the receipt of a [866] portion of the salami, and covenanted to execute a pottah on a certain day. This agreement was afterwards confirmed by two of the defendants who were minors when it was entered into : the confirmation was by deed which was duly registered. Subsequently all the defendants executed a document, which provided for the payment of a portion of the salami on the day when possession should be given as provided in the first agreement, and for the payment of the remainder by instalments which were to carry interest. This document was not registered.

Held, that it was not a "lease or agreement to lease" within the meaning of s. 17 of the Registration Act, and was admissible in evidence.

Mr. Evans, Baboo Sree Nath Doss, Baboo Guru Doss Banerjee, Baboo Kali Doss Khunjo, and Baboo Mahib Chunder Bose for the Appellant.

Baboo Mohini Mohun Roy, Baboo Ras Behary Ghose, and Baboo Jogesh Chunder Dey for the Respondents.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (CUNNINGHAM and MACLEAN, JJ.) which was delivered by

Cunningham, J.—The plaintiff sues to have it declared that three documents, constituting his patni right in certain properties are in force, to be put in possession of the properties, and that the defendants may be ordered to execute a patni pottah in respect of the taluks recorded in the Collector's towjee and a mourasi and mokurari pottah in respect of the tikka and other mehals, and to accept a kabuliat for the same from the plaintiff.

The first of these documents was dated 28th Pous 1283, and was executed by the defendants 1 and 2 ; the second was executed on 21st Bysack 1286 by the defendants 3 and 4, assenting to the terms of the first agreement ; and the third on the 26th Srabun 1286 executed by the four defendants modifying the terms of the first.

The questions raised in this appeal are, first whether the third document is inadmissible in evidence for want of registration ; and, secondly, whether, if it is inadmissible specific performance of the other two contracts can be decreed.

In the first of the three documents the defendants 1 and 2 covenanted that they would grant to the plaintiff a mourasi mokurari istomrari patni pottah of the lands mentioned ; they admitted receipt, of Rs. 4,000 out of Rs. 38,000, the bonus of the [867] patni ; they stated that the permanent rental of the patni, after deducting collection expenses, would be Rs. 33,126-11; that on payment of a further portion, Rs. 5,000, of the bonus, the plaintiff should be put in possession; that the patni rent should be payable in monthly instalments; that the first defendant would cause her second and youngest sons, the third and fourth defendants, to execute the patni and have it registered; that of certain arrears which had accrued, the plaintiff was to pay ten annas to the defendants, paying it in specified instalments, and was to keep six annas; that the plaintiff should pay the defendants road-cess, etc. This document was registered on the 13th May 1879.

The second document was executed by the two younger brothers, and ratified the first, but provided that in addition to the bonus specified in the first agreement a nuzzur of Rs. 4,000 should be presented to them, and that on payment of these two sums before 22nd Jeyt a pottah should be executed and registered. This document was also registered, 13th December 1879, the two brothers admitting execution, but refusing to sign the endorsement on the ground that it had been subsequently superseded by the acts of the plaintiff.

The third instrument was as follows:—"To Kader Nath Mitter, worthy of blessing! May our highest wishes for your welfare attend you.

"With reference to the future settlement in respect of our zamindari, ticca lakhiraj, and daphaet, etc., estate situate in the southern quarter which we have determined to make agreeably to the purport of the agreement of the 28th Pous 1285, one or two terms therein being wanting to complete it, it is this day settled that you should have to pay the sum Rs. 6,000 as salami to my three sons, and that out of the same Rs. 3,000 should have to be paid to my three sons on the date of delivery of possession as provided in the said agreement, i.e., you should pay the said Rs. 3,000 on or before Tuesday the 28th or Wednesday the 29th Srabun, and the balance of Rs. 3,000 on the date of the pottah, and by paying the residue of the bonus within a period of 45 days next after possession in the mofussil you should take a pottah and give a kabuliat. Further, you should pay a sum of Rs. 9,000 on [868] account of the patni bonus on the 31st day of Srabun next; in case you fail to do so, you are to pay interest at the rate of Rs. 1-8 per cent. per mensem from the said month of Srabun. You must pay the monthly rent on the due date, failing to do which, you should pay interest at the rate of 8 annas per cent. per mensem from the due date. In addition to the amount of bonus provided for in the agreement, you should pay a sum of Rs. 2,000 in the shape of bonus, but you are to pay the said sum subsequent to the auction kist in the month of Pous next. All other conditions shall be duly provided in the pottah and kabuliat."

This document was executed by all the defendants, but was not registered, and the question is, whether its non-registration renders it inadmissible in evidence.

This depends on the meaning to be given to s. 17 of the Registration Act III of 1877.

Its first provision is that a salami of Rs. 6,000 should be paid to the three sons, half on the day of delivery of possession as fixed by the first agreement, which it stated to be 28th or 29th Srabun, and the balance within 45 days after possession, upon which a pottah and kabuliat should be exchanged; it provided that Rs. 9,000 on account of the patni bonus should be paid on 31st Srabun then next, failing which it should bear interest; that on failure to pay the monthly instalments plaintiff should pay interest at Rs 1-8 per mensem; that he should pay an additional Rs. 2,000 in shape of bonus, but subsequent to the auction kist in Pous then next.

This document did not in our opinion amount to a "lease or agreement to lease"; it was merely a provision for certain payments to the landlords by way of consideration in addition to those already agreed on; and that in the case of arrears certain interest should be payable. Such an agreement might, we consider, be properly regarded as falling within cl. (h) of s. 17, and so be exempted from registration under cl. (b).

The appeal must, therefore, be decreed, the judgment of the Original Court set aside, so far as it concerns the respondents, defendants 3 and 4, and the case remanded for trial on the merits. Costs of this appeal to be paid by the defendants 3 and 4.

[869] This judgment renders it unnecessary for us to deal with the objections raised by the respondents. The matters referred to in those objections can be disposed of, if necessary, at the hearing by the Original Court.

Appeal allowed.

“ The plaintiff pleads limitation, and alleges that the summons was duly served. I think the application is barred by limitation, it having been brought after the lapse of thirty days from the date of completely executing the process of attachment, issued at the plaintiff's instance for enforcing the judgment, Art. 164, schedule II of the Limitation Act. The attachment was made on the 9th, 13th, and 18th of September, and the present application was presented on the 4th of January last. There is no reason why the Court should not in this case presume, under s. 114 of the Evidence Act, that the attachment, which is an official act, was regularly made. The presumption arising under the section has not been rebutted by any evidence. As the application was not made in time, it must be considered barred by limitation. The application is, therefore, refused.

[870] The petitioner appealed to the High Court on the ground that “ your petitioner, having applied to set aside the ex parte decree within thirty days from the date of the service of sale proclamation, and your petitioner not having been aware of the service of attachment process before, the Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that your petitioner's application was made beyond the period prescribed by the law of limitation. ”

Buboo Ishur Chunder Chuckerbutty for the Appellant.

Baboo Boikunt Nath Dass for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and O'KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by Prinsep, J.—The lower Appellate Court has held that the application under s. 108 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1877 is barred, inasmuch as it was not made within thirty days from the date of executing the process, that is, the attachment in execution of the ex-parte decree. For the judgment-debtor it is contended that there was no such attachment made, and that this application is in time. The lower Court, however, held that in the absence of any evidence on the part of the defendant, it would, under s. 114 of the Evidence Act, presume that the attachment was properly made.

We think that the view taken by the lower Court was perfectly correct, and that it was incumbent on the defendant judgment-debtor to show that he made his application under s. 108 within thirty days from the date of the first process in execution of the decree passed against him. Having failed to do so, his application was correctly disallowed as barred. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court, which was delivered by

Mitter, J.—This is an appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Shahabad in a suit upon a bond. The only question raised in the appeal is, whether the decree for interest from the date fixed in the bond for the repayment of the loan at the particular rate mentioned in the bond is correct or not. There is also another question raised, viz., that the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover interest in excess of the principal. As regards the question of rate, the terms of the bond are quite plain. It says: "I do declare and give out in writing that I shall, without any objection, repay the said amount, principal with interest at the rate of Rs. 1-4 per cent. per mensem, on the 30th Bhadur 1277 Fusli. If I fail to do so on that date as promised, then on the expiration of that date, i.e., from the 1st Assin 1278 Fusli interest on the said amount of loan at the rate of Rs. 1-8 per cent. per mensem, till the date of repayment, shall be due from me." We are bound to decree the rates agreed upon under s. 2, Act XXVIII of 1855, and there is no ground upon which we can say that this stipulation was in the nature of a penalty. Then as regards the question raised before us, as to whether under the Hindu law the plaintiffs were entitled [872] to recover interest in excess of the principal, we are of opinion that the aforesaid s. 2, Act XXVIII of 1855, is also conclusive upon this point. Our attention has been called to several decisions of the Original Side of this Court and of the Bombay High Court; they were based upon the provisions of the Charter of the late Supreme Court, by which it was provided that the Hindu law was to govern contracts between parties who were Hindus in suits before the Supreme Court. But in the mofussil there was a Regulation, viz., Regulation XV of 1793 distinctly providing rules under which interest was to be allowed, and s. 6 of that Regulation provided that in no case interest was to exceed the principal. That section was expressly repealed by Act XXVIII of 1855, and the only section enacted in lieu of s. 6† and other sections repealed was s. 2 of the Act, which says: "In any suit in which interest is recoverable, the amount shall be adjudged or decreed by the Court at the rate (if any) agreed upon by the parties. That being so, it is quite clear that we are bound, under s. 2, Act XXVIII of 1855, to award the full interest that is due under the terms of the bond.

The appeal will, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 244, cl. (c).—Question relating to the execution of the decree—Separate suit.

In a suit to recover possession of land, the defendants resisted execution on the ground that they were cultivators, and that the decree only authorised the plaintiff to recover possession as proprietor. The objection was overruled, and the defendants were ejected. They then sued to set aside the order made in the execution proceedings and to recover possession.

Held, that the suit was barred under s. 244, cl. (c), of the Civil Procedure Code.

THIS was a suit to recover ten bighas of jote land in Mulna Chuk. The plaintiffs alleged that it was their moursi jote; that [873] one Khairat Ali took an izara from Mussamut Latifa, the proprietor, which was to continue until the zuripeshgi was paid; and that on the 7th of July 1855, Khairat Ali sold his izara right to Akbar Khan, and that they held their jote both under Khairat Ali and Akbar Khan. The plaintiffs also alleged that Akbar Khan, on the 21st July 1857, sold his izara right to the wives of the plaintiffs, to whom also they paid rent. The defendant, who afterwards purchased the proprietary rights in Mulna Chuk, sued the present plaintiffs and their wives to recover possession of the disputed land. In that suit the present plaintiffs pleaded that they were mere cultivators, and that their wives were the real purchasers, and their wives admitted having purchased the izara right. On the 11th September 1879, a decree was made for possession in the last-mentioned suit. The present plaintiffs resisted execution on the ground that they being cultivators could not be ejected. This objection was disallowed on the 17th of April 1880, and the present plaintiffs were dispossessed. They then instituted the present suit to recover possession and to set aside the order of the 17th April 1880.

Both the lower Courts, holding that the suit was not barred under s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code, gave the plaintiffs a decree. The defendant appealed to the High Court.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and WILKINSON, JJ.) was delivered by Mitter, J.—We are of opinion that this suit ought to be dismissed as barred under s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code. The defendant appellant before us brought a suit against the present plaintiffs, and also certain other persons, including the wives of the present plaintiffs, as defendants. That suit was for possession of a piece of land, which includes the disputed land. In that suit the plaintiffs alleged that they were in possession as ryots. The question whether they were entitled to remain in possession of the land as ryots or not, was not gone into, but on the 11th of September 1879 a decree for possession was given in favour of the defendant appellant, and the direction in the decree was that [874] the plaintiff in that case, viz., the appellant before us, was to recover possession of the land claimed in the month of Pous 1287. In execution of that decree possession was obtained by the appellant. Thereupon the plaintiffs in this suit appeared as objectors, and contested the right of the appellant before us to eject them from the land now in dispute. Their contention was that the decree awarded to the appellant only the right to recover possession of the property as proprietor, and that it did not extinguish their right as tenants. The matter was gone into, and the Court executing the decree on the 17th April 1880, held that under it the appellant was entitled to recover khas possession of the property by evicting the plaintiffs. Thereupon the present suit was brought to set aside that order and to recover possession of the land in dispute upon the tenant right of the plaintiffs. It appears to us that the question, which was decided by the execution Court, was a question which came under cl. (c) of s. 244. That clause is to the following effect:—"Any other questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree." Now this question, viz., whether under the decree the defendant appellant was entitled to evict the plaintiffs, was a question which arose between the parties to that suit. There is no dispute as to that. It also appears to us that it was a question relating to the execution of that decree. The contention of the plaintiffs was, that the real effect of that decree was simply to entitle the decree-holder to obtain possession as proprietor. On the other hand, the contention of the appellant was that he was entitled under the decree to take khas possession of the property by evicting the plaintiffs in this suit. It was, therefore, a question relating to the execution of that decree, viz., a question as to the construction of it. The matter which was in dispute falling within cl. (c), s. 244, no separate suit would lie. Section 244 says that the questions enumerated in clauses (a), (b) and (c) shall be determined by order of the Court executing the decree and not by separate suit. The plaintiffs, if so advised, might have appealed against the decision of the execution Court, but [875] they are precluded from maintaining a separate suit by the express words of s. 244.

We, therefore, set aside the decision of the lower Appellate Court, and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs in all the Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882), s. 309—Trial by Assessors—Evidence—Summing up of evidence—Delivery of opinions of Assessors—Sessions Judge, Duties of.

The power of summing up the evidence given by s. 309 of the new Code of Criminal Procedure, Act X of 1882, is intended to be exercised in long or intricate cases, and the Sessions Judge should confine himself to summing up the evidence and should not obtrude on the assessors his opinion of the worthlessness or otherwise of certain portions of the evidence.

The Sessions Judge should also conform strictly to the words of s. 309, and require each assessors to state his opinion orally.

The Sessions Judge should not utilize the services of the pleader for the prosecution for the purpose of recording his summing up to the assessors. If he is not capable of recording the substance of it himself, he should employ an independent person for that purpose.

THIS was an appeal from a conviction and sentence of the Sessions Judge of Furreedpore. The facts of the case are sufficiently set out in the judgment of the High Court.

Baboo Grija Sunker Mozoomdar for the Appellants.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Kilby) for the Crown.

Prinsep, J.—After considering the evidence on the record in this case, we are of opinion that the appellants have been rightly [376] convicted under ss. 149 and 304 of the Indian Penal Code. It is clear that they were the ringleaders in a premeditated riot, with the knowledge and intention necessary to bring them within these sections. The mob, of which the appellants were the ringleaders, consisted of about one hundred and twenty-five men, said to have been armed with shields, spears, and clubs. One man was killed, and others were injured.

On these facts we hold that the appellants have been properly convicted, and we also think that the sentences passed on them are not too severe. The appeals are, therefore, dismissed.

It is necessary, however, to make some observations on the procedure adopted by the Sessions Judge. He has taken advantage of the terms of s. 309 of the present Code to sum up the evidence for the prosecution and defence to the assessors. This provision has, for the first time, been introduced into our Code, and in our opinion the object is to enable the Sessions Judge in long or intricate cases to place the evidence in an intelligible form, so as to assist the assessors in arriving at a reasonable conclusion.

* Criminal Appeal, No. 184 of 1883 against the order of F.J.G. Campbell, Esq., Officiating Sessions Judge of Furreedpore, dated the 12th March 1883.

In the present case we observe that the Judge seems rather to have taken an opportunity of expressing his opinion in emphatic terms on every single matter put in evidence. He observes on one point : * * * "although you may utterly disbelieve the witnesses, as this Court has done, with regard to those persons (who had been acquitted), but yet there is no ground for disbelieving them with regard to those men who have been named from the beginning."

Now, it is impossible to suppose that the assessors could have been otherwise than very much embarrassed in coming to an independent opinion of their own in the face of the very decided opinion expressed by the Judge. There are other passages in the summing up which might be quoted to a somewhat similar effect.

In the next place, we observe that the summing up has been recorded by the pleader for the prosecution and accepted by the Judge as correct. We think that such a course should not have been taken by the Judge, and that if he was incapable himself of recording the heads of the summing up to the assessors, he should [877] have availed himself of the services of some Court-officer, or directed it to be done by some independent person.

We next find that, instead of taking the opinion of each assessor, as is required by law, the Judge has received the opinions of all the assessors combined, as delivered through one of them whom he thus regards as the foreman of a jury.

We further observe that four other persons, who were under trial along with the appellants, were acquitted by the Sessions Judge at the termination of the evidence for the prosecution. The grounds on which the judgment of acquittal was based are, that the evidence of identification was unworthy of belief.

Under such circumstances, it was the duty of the Judge, before passing judgment, himself to ask for and record the opinions of the assessors on that evidence. The Judge, however, has thought it unnecessary to do so, because he considers that there was "no evidence" against the accused, the fact being that there was evidence which the Judge thought unworthy of belief.

Appeal dismissed.

Sentence—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 75—Previous conviction.

The object of s. 75 of the Indian Penal Code is to provide for an additional sentence, not a less severe sentence, on a second conviction. Recourse should not be had to that section if the punishment for the offence committed is itself sufficient.

THIS was an appeal from the following finding and sentence of the Judge of Shahabad sitting with assessors on the 19th of March 1883 :—

"The Court concurring with the assessors finds that the accused person Sheo Saran Tato is guilty as charged, namely, that he on or about the 18th day of February 1883, at Arrah, committed house-breaking by night with intent to commit theft, he having previously, that is to say on the 25th August 1874, been convicted of house-breaking by night in order to the committing of theft, such conviction not having been set aside [878] on appeal, and that he thereby committed an offence under s. 457 of the Indian Penal Code punishable under section 457/75 of the same; and under these sections the Court directs that the said Sheo Saran Tato be punished with rigorous imprisonment, which shall extend to four years from this date."

No one appeared to argue the case.

Prinsep, J.—There is no reason for questioning the correctness of the conviction of the appellants, and the sentence is not excessive. The appeal is, therefore, rejected.

We think it necessary, however, to notice a misconception of the object of s. 75, Penal Code, into which the Sessions Judge has fallen. He seems to think that on a second conviction of any of the offences specified in that section he is bound to pass sentence thereunder, and he accordingly observes that, although for the offence committed (s. 457), the prisoner would be liable to imprisonment for fourteen years, he would under s. 75 of the Penal Code, by reason of a previous conviction, be liable to imprisonment for only ten years. He then states that "it is for the prisoner's advantage, provided he is prepared to take his chance of transportation to admit a previous conviction." The object of s. 75 is to provide for an additional sentence, not for a less severe sentence on a second conviction. Recourse should not be had to s. 75 if the punishment for the offence committed is itself sufficient, and even then the Code of Procedure requires that the prisoner should be first convicted of that offence.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal—Security for good behaviour—Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882), ss. 110, 118, 123.

No Appeal lies to the High Court from an order passed by a District Magistrate under the provisions of s. 123 of the Criminal Procedure Code and on reference by the Magistrate confirmed by the Sessions Judge under the same section, requiring a person to be detained in prison, until he should provide security for his good behaviour.

[879] IN this case a rule was issued under s. 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code by the Officiating Magistrate of Patna, calling upon the appellant to show cause why he should not be ordered to provide two good and sufficient securities in Rs. 50 each, and his own recognizance in Rs. 100 to be of good behaviour for three years. On cause shown the rule was made absolute under s. 118 of the Criminal Procedure Code, but the appellant was unable to provide the necessary security. The Magistrate detained him in prison pending the orders of the Sessions Judge. The latter passed the following order: "The respondent, Chand Khan must give his own recognizance of Rs. 100, and find two securities in Rs. 50 each for three years, as required by the Magistrate whose order is confirmed under s. 123 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Failure to comply will entail on the respondent rigorous imprisonment not exceeding three years until compliance." Chand Khan appealed to the High Court.

No one appeared to argue the case.

Prinsep, J.—We think that no appeal lies in this case. Section 406 provides expressly for an appeal on behalf of a person required by a Magistrate, other than the District Magistrate or a Presidency Magistrate, to give security for good behaviour, and the law nowhere declares that any appeal shall lie in other cases of this class. The order moreover is not a conviction on a trial held by a Sessions Judge (s. 410), nor a sentence of the District Magistrate subject to the confirmation of the Sessions Judge (s. 408a), and, therefore under s. 404 no appeal would lie.

Appeal dismissed.

The Oriental Bank Corporation
versus

The Baree Tea Company, Limited.

Principal and Agent—Managing Agent—Authority of Agent—Liability of Principal—Banker and Customer—Bills of exchange—Indorser and Acceptor.

N. & Co., the Managing Agents of the Baree Tea Company, had a general banking account with the Oriental Bank Corporation, which account they were allowed to overdraw on having the overdraft properly secured. Under the Articles of Association of the Baree Tea Company, N. & Co. had power to "draw, accept, endorse, and negotiate on behalf of the Company all such cheques, promissory notes, drafts, etc., as should be necessary for enabling them to carry on the business of the Company." Purporting to act under this power N. & Co. drew a bill of exchange on the Managing Agents of the Company, which was accepted by the latter, and endorsed by N. & Co., to the Oriental Bank Corporation, who credited the amount to N. & Co.'s general account. The amount was drawn out by cheques drawn by N. & Co., personally, without reference to the Baree Tea Company, and there was no proof that the money had been applied for the purposes of the Baree Tea Company.

Held, in an action by the Oriental Bank against the Baree Tea Company, that the latter were not liable on the bills as acceptors.

TWO suits were brought by the Oriental Bank Corporation, the indorsees of certain bills of exchange, against the Baree Tea Company, Limited, as acceptors, to recover the amount of the bills. From the evidence it appeared that Nicholls & Co., who (previously to the month of February 1881), carried on the business of Bankers and Agents in Calcutta, had been appointed Managing Agents of the Baree Tea Company in 1874, and as such Managing Agents had power under the Articles of Association to "draw, accept, endorse, and negotiate all such cheques, promissory notes, drafts, etc., as should be necessary for enabling them to carry on the business of the Company."

It appeared that for several years Nicholls & Co., had a general banking account with the Oriental Bank, and in [881] September 1879 Mr. William Nicholls, the senior partner of the firm of Nicholls & Co., applied to the manager of the Bank for a loan to the Baree Tea Company. He showed the accounts and the Directors' report of the Tea Company, stated to the Manager that the Company was in need of money to carry on its business, and, producing the Articles of Association, pointed out the passage above quoted, giving the Managing Agents power to accept and draw bills for the purpose of the Company. The Manager agreed to advance the money, and advances were made by discounting bills to the amount required. These advances were paid off by Nicholls & Co. No separate account was opened with the Baree Tea Co., the proceeds of the bills being credited to, and the amounts drawn debited in, the general accounts of Messrs. Nicholls & Co.

It appeared from the bank books that Messrs. Nicholls & Co. were allowed to overdraw their account on having the overdrafts properly secured, and on the 22nd of April 1880, the amount overdrawn was Rs. 23,560-12-5, which amount was secured by the deposit of Government paper belonging to Nicholls & Co., to the amount of Rs. 26,000. In this state of affairs, on the 22nd of April, Mr. William Nicholls applied to the Manager of the Bank for a loan for the purposes of the Baree Tea Company, Limited. The Manager agreed to give the loan, and the transaction was carried out as follows :—A bill of exchange for Rs. 15,000 payable “to us or order” three months after date was drawn by “Nicholls & Co.,” and directed “to the Managing Agents, Baree Tea Company, Limited, Calcutta.” Across the face of the bill was written, “accepted due 22-25th July 1880. Nicholls and Co., Managing Agents, Baree Tea Company, Limited.” This bill was endorsed by Nicholls and Co., to the Oriental Bank, was discounted by the Bank at the market rate of the day, and the proceeds Rs. 14,690-15-5 were credited in the general banking account of Messrs. Nicholls & Co. It has been stated above, that before this transaction the debit balance in the deposit ledger of the Bank was Rs. 23,560-12-5. After the transaction the debit balance was stated to be Rs. 8,869-13-0, being the difference between Rs. 23,560-12-5 and Rs. 14, 690-15-5. After this date, the 22nd April 1880, the name of the Baree Tea Company did not [882] appear in the books of the Bank ; and Mr. Harper, the Bank Manager, stated, “the amount was drawn out by cheques by Nicholls and Co., personally, without any reference to the Baree Tea Company.” The bill for Rs. 15,000 was never paid ; but was renewed from time to time by other bills drawn in a similar form and finally by the bills the subject-matter of the present suits, which were drawn, accepted and endorsed, on the 5th of February 1881.

The Baree Tea Company denied liability for the amount of the bills ; denied the authority of Nicholls & Co., to accept the bills so as to bind the Company ; denied that the bills were drawn or accepted for the purposes of the Tea Company ; and alleged that the bills, if endorsed, were wrongfully endorsed for the purpose of securing debts of Nicholls & Co., due to the plaintiff Bank, and that the Bank had notice of such wrongful endorsement. The case was tried by WILSON, J., who on the 23rd of May 1882 delivered the following Judgment :—

Wilson, J.—The plaintiff Bank in those two cases sues the defendant Company upon certain bills of exchange accepted on behalf of the Company by Nicholls & Co. By the Articles of Association, Art. 6, the managing agents, Nicholls and Co., had power “to draw, accept, endorse, and negotiate on behalf of the Company all such cheques, promissory notes, hundies, drafts, Government and other securities as shall be necessary for enabling them to carry on the business of the Company.” The bills in question were accepted by Nicholls & Co., professing to represent the Company, to secure advances which Nicholls & Co. said they required for the purposes of the Company. Several objections were raised to the plaintiff’s right to recover, some of which would require grave consideration, if it were necessary to decide upon them. But I do not think it necessary to deal with more than one objection, because that one seems to me to be fatal. If Nicholls & Co., had authority to accept such bills as those sued upon, they could only have a right to do so for the purposes of the Company ; but I do not think it is open to the Bank in this case to say that the transaction was anything but a transaction with Nicholls & Co., personally. The consideration for the bills was not an advance to the Company, or indeed any advance at all. [883] The Bank merely credited Nicholls &

Co., in their general account with the amount of each bill, and that account was an overdrawn account, though the overdraft was, no doubt, secured. Suit dismissed with costs.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Mr. Branson and Mr. Hill for the Appellants.

Mr. Branson.—The evidence shows that Nicholls & Co. kept the Baree Tea Company going when they were in great difficulties, and it is only fair to presume that the money raised by the Bank was applied for the Company's benefit. The Managing Agents of the Company came to the plaintiffs to ask for an advance on behalf of the Company. They had a clear right to draw and accept bills under the Articles of Association, and the Bank was not bound to see to the application of the money. Mr. Harper's evidence shows clearly that credit was given not to Nicholls & Co., but to the Baree Tea Company. Counsel referred to Gray v. Johnston (L. R. 3 H. L. 1).

Mr. Hill on the same side contended on the evidence that there was no doubt that an advance was made by the Bank, and that that advance was made to the Tea Company and not to Nicholls & Co. The accounts showed that at the time the advance was made the Tea Company were in want of the money. Nicholls & Co., had power to pledge the credit of the Company, and the Bank were satisfied that that was the case. The Bank was not bound to look to the application of the money, nor was it aware that Nicholls & Co. were committing a breach of trust, or a fraud on the Company—see Gray v. Johnston (L. R., 3 H. L., 1). Even had the account with the Bank been opened in the name of the Tea Company, Nicholls & Co. as Managing Agents could have at once transferred the money to their own account. As to the form of the bills the learned Counsel contended that they were the bills of the Tea Company not of Nicholls & Co. : see the rules of law referred to in Story on Agency, ss. 147 and 154, and Lindus v. Melrose (2 H. & N., 293 : s. c. 4 Jur. N. S., 488), and that it need not be expressed in words that they were made "by or on behalf of the [884] Company," if there was sufficient to show that they were so made. He also contended that there was an exclusion of personal ability—see Alexander v. Sizer (L. R. 4 Ex., 102).

Mr. Pugh and Mr. Trevelyan for the respondents were not called on.

Garth, C.J.—In these cases I entirely agree with the Court below, and upon the same grounds.

Both suits were brought to recover the amount of certain bills of exchange from the defendants Company, which bills, it was alleged, had been drawn by Messrs. Nicholls & Co., upon, and accepted by themselves as the defendants' Agents, and endorsed by Nicholls & Co. to the plaintiffs Bank.

Messrs. Nicholls & Co., were undoubtedly the Managing Agents of the defendants Company and by the Articles of Association they were empowered as such Agents "to draw, accept, endorse, and negotiate on behalf of the Company all such cheques, promissory notes, drafts, etc., as should be necessary for enabling them to carry on the business of the Company."

The bills in question were drawn by Nicholls & Co., upon the Managing Agents of the Baree Tea Company; they were accepted by Nicholls & Co., under the description "Managing Agents of the Baree Tea Company." They were payable to the order of Nicholls & Co., and endorsed by Nicholls & Co. to the plaintiffs Bank.

These bills were given in renewal of certain other bills, which were in a similar form, and the origin of them all was a bill for Rs. 15,000, dated the 22nd of April 1880, drawn, accepted, and endorsed in the same way. The question whether the plaintiffs can succeed in these suits admittedly depends upon whether they could have successfully sued the defendants upon the last mentioned bill.

The defendants take two principal objections to the suit: first they say, that the bills were not accepted in such a form as to bind the defendants; and secondly, that as a matter of fact, the [885] bill for Rs. 15,000 was not drawn or accepted for the purposes of the Company, and that it was not necessary for Nicholls & Co., to accept that bill to enable them to carry on the business of the Company.

I agree with the learned Judge in the Court below, that it is not necessary to consider the first of these points, because I think that upon the plaintiffs' own evidence, the second point should be decided in the defendants' favour.

The question appears to me to be one of fact. Was the bill for Rs. 15,000 drawn and accepted for the purposes of the Company? Or can we say upon the evidence that it was necessary for carrying on the business of the defendants' Company that the bill should have been negotiated?

Now the relations between the plaintiffs and Nicholls & Co. at the time when the bill was drawn were as follows:—The plaintiffs were the private bankers of Nicholls & Co., who kept a current account there. The plaintiffs were in the habit of allowing Nicholls & Co., to overdraw their account, sometimes to a considerable amount; and the latter had deposited with the plaintiffs Government securities to cover those overdrafts to the amount of Rs. 26,000.

Nicholls & Co., were at this time engaged in a great variety of business transactions, and on the 22nd of April 1880 they had overdrawn their account with the plaintiffs to the amount of Rs. 23,560. A few days previously the balance against them had been Rs. 36,000.

In this state of things Mr. Harper, the Manager of the Bank, tells us that Mr. Nicholls (of the firm of Messrs. Nichols & Co.) stated to him that his firm wanted money to carry on the Baree Tea Gardens, and that they proposed to do, (what they had done before on more than one occasion) namely, to draw a bill upon themselves as Agents for the defendant Company in the form in which these bills were drawn, and then to accept and endorse it to the Bank. To this Mr. Harper assented, and the bill for Rs. 15,000 was negotiated. No money passed between them upon the transaction, but the bill was entered in the usual way in the plaintiffs' bill book, and Nicholls & Co., [886] were credited in their current account with the plaintiffs with the amount of the bills, less discount.

It is perfectly true, that after this transaction moneys were from time to time drawn out of the plaintiffs' Bank by Nicholls & Co., which it is probable that the Bank would not have allowed them to draw, but for the fact of the proceeds of this bill having been placed to their credit. But it has not been shewn, that any of these sums were required for or expended upon the defendants' Tea Garden, or were otherwise used for the purposes of the defendants' Company.

The direct and immediate effect of the transaction, as the Bank well knew, was simply this: to reduce the balance due to them by Nicholls & Co., in their private current account by the sum of Rs. 15,000 less discount; and if Nicholls & Co., had failed the next day, as indeed they did not long afterwards, the effect of the transaction would only have been to pay off the private debt to the Bank of Nicholls & Co., and the defendants' Company could have derived from it no benefit whatever.

Even if the Rs. 15,000 had been paid into the hands of Nicholls & Co., instead of being applied by the plaintiffs in discharge of Nicholls & Co.'s private debt to them, I much doubt whether the defendants would be liable to pay the amount of the bills, unless it could be shewn, which it certainly has not been in this suit, that the money was really required for the purposes of the defendants' Company. If the defendants could be fixed with liability to the Bank, by Nicholls and Co., by merely informing the Bank that they required money for carrying on the defendants' gardens, it seems to me, that it would have been in the power of Nicholls and Co., to raise any sum of money they pleased upon the defendants' credit, without applying, or intending to apply, a single rupee of it for the defendants' benefit.

I entirely agree with the lower Court that the defendants are not liable upon the bills in question, and I think that these appeals should be dismissed with costs on scale 2.

Cunningham, J.—I concur in dismissing these appeals. The question on which the case depends is, whether the circumstances under which the bill for Rs. 15,000 was given to the Bank were [887] such as to entitle the Bank to look to any one but Nicholls and Co., for their satisfaction. I think that the Court below rightly held that the Bank could hold no one but Nicholls and Co., responsible. Nicholls and Co., were in the habit of advancing funds for the Baree Tea Company, of which they were Agents. These advances were made from their general balance at the Oriental Bank, and this balance was kept up by large overdrafts, partially secured, which the Bank allowed Nicholls and Co. to make. It was also kept up by the proceeds of bills, which Nicholls and Co. drew on the Company, and themselves accepted as Agents to the Company. These bills were discounted by the Bank, and the proceeds went to reduce Nicholls and Co.'s overdrawn account. It is true that Mr. Harper says that Mr. Nicholls told him on one occasion when a bill was thus discounted, that the money was required for carrying on the Baree Tea Company, and that his firm had made advances to the Company; and on the occasion when the bill for Rs. 15,000 was given, he said "that he wanted another discount to carry on the Baree Tea Gardens." That, thereupon, the bill was discounted, and the proceeds placed to Nicholls and Co.'s credit; but I do not think that this justifies the Bank in holding the Baree Tea Company responsible, or that a bill so drawn and so employed could be properly regarded as falling within the scope of Article 56 of the Company's Articles. That article empowers the Agents "to draw, accept endorse, and negotiate on behalf of the Company, all such cheques, promissory notes, hundies, drafts, Government and other securities as shall be necessary for enabling them to carry on the business of the Company." I do not think that this empowered them to accept bills drawn on the Company with a view that the proceeds should be placed to their general account, and that from that general account advances should be, from time to time, made to the Company. The arrangement had the effect, as my Lord has pointed out, of exposing the Company to lose the entire benefit of the bill in case of Nicholls and Co.'s failing before any further advances were made by them to the Company. Article 56 does not, in my opinion, contemplate any such arrangement, but merely the drawing and accepting of bills in the ordinary transaction of the Company's business.

[888] The case of Gray v. Johnston (L. R., 3 H. L., 1), has been much insisted on as justifying the appellants' contention; but that case merely defined the circumstances which will justify a bank in refusing to honor a customer's cheque, that customer being an executor. In fact, Lord WESTBURY'S remarks seems to me to go strongly against the Bank. "It has been very well settled, that if an executor or trustee, who is indebted to a banker, or to another person, having the legal custody of the assests of a trust estate, applies a portion of them in the payment of his own debt to the individual having that custody, the individual receiving the debt has at once not only abundant proof of the breach of trust, but participates in it for his own personal benefit."

In the present instance, when the bill was discounted, the Bank was in custody of funds which Nicholls and Co. held to the Bank's knowledge in trust for the Company; and being so in custody, it received partial payment of its own debt from Nicholls and Co. out of those funds, and thus it seems to me, fell within the scope of Lord WESTBURY'S remarks.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 9th April, 1883.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE MITTER, AND MR. JUSTICE WILKINSON.

versus

Land Mortgage Bank of India.....Plaintiffs.*

Hindu law, alienation—Mitakshara—Mortgage by father—Liability of sons not made parties—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 283.

The L Bank advanced money to C, a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara school of law upon mortgage of ancestral property. S, who was stated to be C's only son, joined in the mortgage. Subsequently the Bank obtained a decree against C and S for the amount due on the mortgage. On attempting to sell the mortgaged property other sons of C objected. This objection was allowed, and the mortgagees referred to a regular suit.

[889] They then sued all the sons of C to establish their lien on the mortgaged property.

Held, that the suit was maintainable under s. 283 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Nuthro Lall Chowdhry v. Shoukee Lall (10 B. L. R., 200); and Mussamut Dhare v. Hurry Prosad (unreported), distinguished.

* Appeal from Original Decree, No. 120 of 1881, against the decree of Baboo Mohendro Nath Bose, Subordinate Judge of Tirhoot, dated the 14th February 1881.

THIS was a suit for a declaration that certain property, which had been mortgaged to the plaintiffs, was charged with the plaintiffs' lien, and was liable for the full amount of their claim, and for sale.

It appeared that on the 7th of April 1873 the plaintiff Bana advanced the sum of Rs. 10,000 to one Chundermun Koer, a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara school of law, his son Singheswar Koer joining in the mortgage upon the security of a mouzah called Ababakerpore. The mortgage-deed, which was in the English form, contained a recital, that the mortgagor was subject to Mitakshara law, and that Singheswar Koer was his only son. On the 13th of June 1873 the plaintiff Bank obtained a decree for the amount of the loan, with interest and costs, making the mortgaged property liable in satisfaction. The Bank then sought to execute the decree by sale of the mortgaged property, but five other sons of Chundermun Koer (in the present suit the defendants 1 to 5) objected to the sale on the ground that as members of the joint family they were equally interested with Chundermun and Singheswar in the ancestral property which had been mortgaged without their consent or permission. This objection was allowed on the 19th of November 1878, the Judge holding that the joint and undivided interest of the sons other than Singheswar was not liable to attachment and sale in execution, and referring the plaintiff Bank to a separate suit to enforce their lien.

The plaintiff Bank now sued all the sons of Chundermun, alleging that they (the plaintiff Bank) were entitled to recover jointly and severally from all the defendants and from the mortgaged property all moneys then due, or to become due, under the decree on the following grounds: (1) that the property mortgaged was not family property; (2) because the debt covered by the [890] mortgage-bond and the decree was a proper and valid debt for which Chundermun Koer, the father and manager, could legally pledge the property; (3) because the defendants were the heirs and legal representatives of Chundermun Koer, and had inherited from him property far exceeding in value the amount due to the plaintiff Bank; and (4) because the plaintiff Bank were entitled to protection as bona fide mortgagees without notice of the claim of the defendants 1 to 5. The defendants pleaded that the suit was barred under ss. 13 and 43 of the Civil Procedure Code. It was proved that before the loan the Manager of the plaintiff Bank had made enquiries as to the family of Chundermun Koer, and that the fact that there were other sons than Singheswar was concealed from him. The Subordinate Judge gave the plaintiff Bank a decree, declaring that the entire mortgaged property was liable to satisfy the debt due to the Bank, and that if it was not sufficient the other properties of the defendants should be liable.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry and Baboo Doorga Dass Dutt for the Appellants.

Baboo Dwarka Nath Mookerjee and Baboo Kashi Kant Sen for the Respondents.

Mitter, J.—The appellants before us are the five sons of one Chundermun Koer, viz., Silanath Koer, Gopinath Koer, Hera Lall Koer, Hurbuns Narain Koer, and Rughoobuns Narain Koer; and Mussamut Amilbutee Thakooranee, widow of Chundermun Koer, Hurbuns Narain and Rughoobuns Narain Koer are said to be minors. It was also stated in the course of the argument that the first four sons are at present adults, and were also adults on the 7th April 1873, when the mortgage bond, the origin of the present suit, was executed. There is some evidence in support of that statement. The lower Court has not expressed any opinion upon it, but we may take it as a fact proved that they were adults on the 7th April 1873. It appears that this bond [891] of the 7th April 1873 was executed by Chundermun Koer and his eldest son Singheswar Koer, who was the defendant No. 6 in the lower Court, but who has not joined in the appeal which has been preferred to this Court. In this bond, which was for Rs. 10,000, a property named mouzah Ababakerpore Kowahi was hypothecated as collateral security for the loan. A suit was brought against Chundermun Koer and Singheswar Koer, the executants of the bond, and a decree was obtained on the 10th June 1877. After this decree was passed, Chundermun died. Then the decree-holder applied for the execution of this decree against Singheswar Koer and the appellants, other than the widow of Chundermun, as representatives of the deceased Chundermun. An objection was made that the appellants, other than the widow of Chundermun, were not his legal representatives. Thereupon the decree-holders, the respondents before us, withdrew their application to proceed against the appellants, other than the widow of Chundermun, as the legal representatives of latter. The mortgaged property having been attached on the 23rd June 1878, a petition was filed by the appellants, who are the sons of Chundermun, to the effect that their interest in the mortgaged property could not be sold, inasmuch as they were not parties to the original mortgage transaction of the 7th April 1873. On the 19th November 1878 the execution Court being of opinion that the objection was valid released their interest in the mortgaged property from attachment, and the present suit was brought by the Land Mortgage Bank of India, the decree-holders in that proceeding, on the 17th of November 1879. They pray that it may be declared that in spite of the objections taken by the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 the entire mortgaged property mentioned above is charged with the plaintiffs' lien, and is liable for the full amount of the plaintiffs' claim under the aforesaid mortgaged bond; and (2) that the defendants Nos. 1 to 6 may be declared by the Court liable to pay severally or jointly with defendants No. 6 all the amount due up to this time, and also the amount which may be due in future to the plaintiff Bank according to the conditions laid down in the decree dated 13th June 1877. There are other prayers in the plaint, but it is not necessary to refer to [892] them. The defendants in their written statement allege that the original loan transaction was not for the benefit of the family, and that their shares in the family property were, therefore, not liable for the debt, and for the same reason they alleged that they were not also personally liable. This was their statement on the merits of the plaintiffs' claim, but they urged two objections against the maintenance of the suit: (1) that the present claim was barred under s. 13 of the Procedure Code, there having been already an adjudication of the cause of action upon which the suit was brought; (2) that the claim of the plaintiffs was barred by the law of limitation. The lower Court, overruling all these objections, has awarded a decree in favour of the plaintiffs in these terms: "That the suit be decreed in favour of the plaintiffs, and it being proved that the entire mortgaged property, i.e., Mouzah Ababakerpore Kowahi, is ancestral property, the same is liable for Rs. 16,859-13-9, being the amount of decretal money, principal with interest, up to date of suit, and further interest from the date of suit up to the date of realisation under the terms of the decree dated 13th June 1877: and that in case of the entire amount not being realised therefrom, the persons and other property of the defendants shall be held liable for the remaining portion of the debt." Against this decree Singheswar Koer has not appealed, and it must therefore stand as against him. We have no jurisdiction to go into the question whether it was a correct decree against him or not. We have only to deal with the appeal of the appellants before us. It was contended, on their behalf that this suit was not maintainable, that it was based upon a cause of action upon which a suit had been brought and disposed of, that there was no separate cause of action upon which this suit has been brought, and that, although it was urged that the appellants were not parties to the suit which was brought upon the bond and decreed on the 13th June 1877, still, if they were jointly liable with the executant of the bond a second suit would not lie against them, the cause of action having been exhausted in the first suit. In support of this contention two cases have been cited before us, viz., the case of Nuthoo Lall Chorahry v. Shoukee Lall (10 B.L.R., 200), [893] and the case of Mussamut Dhace v. Hurry Prosad, an unreported decision of this Court dated 22nd March 1882. The whole of this contention, it seems to us, is based upon a misapprehension as to the nature of the plaintiffs' claim. We are of opinion that the present suit was maintainable under the provisions of s. 283 of the Civil Procedure Code. It has been already stated that in execution of the decree dated 30th June 1877, the whole of the mortgaged property was attached. Thereupon an objection was preferred by the sons of Chundermun other than Singheswar Koer. That objection (as the execution Court distinctly says) was disposed of under s. 280 of the Code, and it appears to us from the statements made in the petition by which that objection was first preferred that it properly came within the purview of ss. 278 to 282. Now s. 278 says: "If any claim be preferred to, or any objection be made to the attachment of, any property attached in execution of a decree, on the ground that such property is not liable to such attachment, the Court shall proceed to investigate the claim or objection." In this case their contention was that the property attached in execution of the decree, dated 10th June 1877, was not wholly liable to sale in execution of that decree. Then s. 280 says, after providing for other cases which have no application to the present, that if upon the said investigation the Court is satisfied that, for the reasons stated in the claim or objection, the property attached was in the possession of the judgment-debtor, partly on his own account and partly on account of some other person, the Court shall pass an order for releasing the property wholly, or to such extent as it thinks fit, from attachment. In this case, as we shall presently show from the judgment of the execution Court, it was found that the property attached was partly in the possession of the judgment-debtor and partly in the possession of the claimants—in fact that it was a joint-family property belonging to the father and the son; and the sons being objectors the Court found that it was partly in the possession of the father and partly in that of the sons. Having found that fact the Court released the interest of the sons from attachment under s. 280. That being so the plaintiffs were entitled to bring this suit under s. 283. In order to show [894] that this was really the nature of the proceedings in the execution Court, we have only to glance at the points decided by that Court. The proceeding is to be found at page 42 of the paper book. After stating the questions that were to be determined in that proceeding, the Court said: "Whether the act of the father was or not valid is not, however, a question that can be tried in this summary case like the claim preferred under s. 278 of the Procedure Code by third parties to property attached in execution of a decree. "The Court has to try such claim, and see whether the property belongs to such third party, and to release it from attachment and sale if it is found to belong to him and to be in his possession; so upon the objections of the sons of the mortgagor in this case, the Court must see whether the property mortgaged is ancestral and the sons were in conjoint possession, and if they were, whether they should not have the share claimed by them, the extent of which is not disputed, exempted from attachment and sale." Then the learned Subordinate Judge further said: "I cannot enter into the question of the validity, or otherwise, of the mortgage summarily," and so on. After coming to the conclusion that the mortgaged property was in the joint possession of the father and the sons he allowed the claim, and declared that the share claimed was to be exempted from attachment and sale. Then, there is a further declaration at the end of the order to the effect that, "if the decree-holders have any lien on the shares released by virtue of the hypothecation of the said shares having been included in their bond, they must sue to enforce the same by a suit against the objectors." It is, therefore, quite clear that the present suit was brought under s. 283 of the Civil Procedure Code. That being so, the cases cited have no sort of application to the present. In the case of Nuthoo Lall Chowdhry v. Shoukee Lall (10 B. L. R., 200) the facts were these: A bond was executed by two persons named Domun Lall and Bhowani Pershad in favour of the plaintiffs in that case. In that bond they hypothecated their share of a certain property, and a decree was obtained against Domun and Bhowani Pershad declaring [893] their shares in the hypothecated property to be liable for the satisfaction of the mortgage debt. In execution of that decree their shares were brought to sale, and a part of the money decreed was realised. These facts are thus stated by Chief Justice COUCH in his judgment. It appears that the plaintiffs executed that decree, viz., the decree which they obtained against Domun and Bhowani Pershad, "and according to the statement in the plaint in the present suit, they sold the right and interest of the two persons named in it, still, in the execution of the decree, treating it as an instrument which had pledged the shares of those two. They recovered the sum of Rs. 7,435, and now, instituting a suit on the 3rd of December 1870, they say: "Since the decree was not against all the defendants, the whole of the mortgaged property in which the second party defendants hold a share, was not put up to sale, but the fact is, that there being community of interest, the loan was taken, and mortgage concluded alike by all defendants; hence all of them are jointly liable to your petitioners, and the entire property ought to be held liable." In that case, therefore, the plaintiffs having obtained a decree by which the shares of the two persons who were the executants of the bond were rendered liable, and having, in execution of that decree sold these shares, brought a second suit for the purpose of extending the operation of that decree on the ground that the original loan that was taken by Domun and Bhowani Pershad was taken not on behalf of themselves only, but on behalf of themselves and the remaining members of the joint Hindu family of which they are the members. It was held that such a suit would not lie, and that conclusion was arrived at upon the ground that either the original bond was executed by these two persons alone, or that it was executed by these two persons as managers of the joint family; if executed by these two alone no suit would lie against the others; if executed by them as managers then all the other members were liable jointly, but the creditors having elected to sue some of the joint-debtors only, were not entitled to bring another suit against those left out in the first suit. That is not the nature of the present suit. It is not the sole object of this suit to make the appellants before us liable on the original cause of action. So far as the [896] plaint contains a prayer to that effect, it is no doubt liable to objection; but so far as it is a suit to have it declared that the mortgaged property is liable to be sold in execution of the plaintiff's decree, it comes under s. 283. That section says: The party against whom an order under s. 280, 281, or 282 is passed, may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute, but subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive. Here the decree-holders have brought this suit to establish the right that they are entitled to sell the mortgaged property in execution of the decree they have already obtained upon the original cause of action. Therefore the decision in Nuthoo Lall Chowdhry v. Shoukee Lall is not applicable to the facts of the present case. The other case cited is entirely based upon the decision in the case of Nuthoo Lall Chowdhry v. Shoukee Lall. It may be observed, however, that in this last case the learned Judges make this observation: "We do not wish to be understood to hold that in a suit properly brought the mortgagee cannot obtain an order from the Court declaring that as a son in a Mitakshara family, a person in the position of the defendant might not be liable for debts lawfully incurred by his father. That is not, as we understand it, the present case and the nature of the claim now made. The original mortgage bond, we observe, is not on the record, but so far as we can gather from the terms of the plaint and from the counter-objection made by the decree-holder in execution of his decree, we learn that the mortgagee throughout regarded this transaction as being one in which the father alone was concerned, and in which he sought to obtain payment of his debt out of property which belonged exclusively to the father." This observation at once shows that this case is clearly distinguishable from the present. We are, therefore, of opinion that so far as this is a suit under s. 283 it is not barred as res judicata. That being our view upon the question of res judicata the question of limitation as a matter of course falls to the ground, for the limitation laid down in respect of suits under s. 283 is one year from the date of the order, and the present suit was admittedly brought within that period. Therefore, we need not discuss the questions that have been raised in this appeal, viz., [897] whether this was a suit to enforce the original mortgage lien, or to make the defendants liable for money had to their use. The next question is, whether under s. 283 the plaintiffs in this case have established their right to have the whole of the mortgaged property sold in execution of the decree obtained against the appellants' father, and, the solution of this question depends upon the solution of another, viz., whether or not the original mortgage bond of 1873 is binding upon the sons. It has been already stated that four of these appellants were adults at the time when this bond was executed. Several cases have been cited before us in order to establish this proposition of law, viz., that where there are adult sons, the father, even in case of necessity, has no right, without the concurrence of these sons, to deal with the ancestral property. So far as this proposition goes it has been well established by decided cases, and we are bound to hold that the adult sons are not concluded by a transaction to which they are not parties, unless their assent to it, express or implied, is proved. It may be mentioned here that one of the questions at issue between the parties was, whether the mortgaged property was ancestral or not. The plaintiffs stated that it was the self-acquired property of Chunderman. The lower Court has found against the plaintiffs upon this point, and there is no appeal against that part of the judgment. We must, therefore, take it that it was ancestral. But having regard to the circumstances, to which we shall presently refer, it seems to us that, although there was no express consent by the sons, there was clear evidence of implied consent on their part to the transaction of 1873. (His Lordship then considered the evidence as to this point and continued). We consequently come to the conclusion that the mortgage of the 7th April 1873 was a valid transaction binding upon the whole of the family. The widow has no locus standi in the case, unless a partition of the family property be decreed. Therefore, we need not take any notice of the widow, so far as the question of consent is concerned. The plaintiffs have established their right to sell the mortgaged property. That being so, so far as the lower Court's decree declares that right it is correct ; but then that decree goes further and declares that all the defendants are personally liable. It does [898] not appear to us upon what ground that part of the decree is based. That part of the decree must, therefore, be set aside. Although we set aside that part of the decree of the lower Court, having regard to the unjustified opposition on the part of the appellants, we think that they ought to be made liable for the costs of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs' suit will, therefore, be decreed in the manner stated above against all the defendants with costs in both Courts.

Appeal allowed.

NOTES.

[In the following cases, it has been held that when the sons are not parties to the suit against their father, the creditor may sue them in another suit (1907) 29 All., 544 ; (1899) 21 All., 301 ; (1888) 11 Mad., 113, or proceed against their interests in execution, 12 Mad., 142 ; 9 Cal., 389 ; 20 Cal., 328.

In this case, the creditor at first pursued the latter course, and when in execution he proceeded against the interests of the sons, he was confronted with their objections which were upheld. The suit subsequently brought by him against them was held by the Court not barred, being one expressly allowed by the Civil Procedure Code in the circumstances. The Court did not decide on the general right of the creditor to bring a separate suit against the sons. These views found support in 7 Mad., 295 (297) ; 8 Mad., 376 (378) ; 22 All., 307 (310) ; 23 Cal., 302 (309).

As regards the adult son, see also (1882) 4 All., 309 ; 9 Cal. 195, at 501.]

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92—Evidence contradicting document—Mortgage—Conditional sale.

It does not necessarily follow from s. 92† of the Evidence Act that subsequent conduct and surrounding circumstances may not be given in evidence for the purpose of showing that what on the face of it is a conveyance is really a mortgage. This rule turns on the fraud which is involved in the conduct of the person who is really a mortgagee, and who sets himself up as an absolute purchaser, and the rule of admitting evidence for the purpose of defeating this fraud would not apply to an innocent purchaser without notice of the existence of the mortgage, who merely bought from a person who was in possession of title deeds and was the ostensible owner of the property.

THIS was a suit to establish the plaintiff's right to certain land. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant Kashi Nath Dass had conveyed the land in question to the second defendant Jadu Nath Dass, from whom the plaintiff purchased. The defendant Kashi Nath Dass pleaded that the deed executed by him in favour of Jadu Nath Dass, though it purported to be a kobala, was in fact a deed of conditional sale. At the hearing the Munsif refused to admit evidence to show that the transaction between Kashi Nath and Jadu Nath was really a mortgage [899] and not a sale, considering that such evidence was inadmissible under s. 92 of the Evidence Act, and gave the plaintiff a decree. The Subordinate Judge took the same view and confirmed the Munsif's judgment.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Rash Behary Ghose and Baboo Jogesh Chunder Banerjee for the Appellants.

Baboo Gopal Lall Mitter for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (CUNNINGHAM and MACLEAN, JJ.) was delivered by

Cunningham, J.—The point raised in this appeal is that the Court below was in error in holding that the defendant was not entitled to plead, nor was the evidence tendered by him admissible to show that the document mentioned in the plaint as a deed of purchase was only a security for money. There has been some wavering of opinion at different periods among the Courts in this country as to the law of evidence on this point. The law for some periods was laid down, so far as concerned this Court, by the Full Bench Ruling in Kashi Nath Chatterjee v. Chandi Charan Banerjee (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 383 : 5 W. R., 68), in which it was held that, though evidence of a contemporaneous oral agreement was inadmissible to show that a document purporting to be an absolute conveyance was only a mortgage, yet that evidence might be given of the facts of the case, and of the subsequent conduct of the parties in order to show that this was the case.

After the passing of the Evidence Act it was held by some learned Judges of this Court that the Full Bench Ruling was no longer a correct exposition of the law. That view, however, was called in question in a decision of the Bombay High Court, Baksu Lakshman v. Govinda Kanji (I. L. R., 4 Bom., 594), in which case the learned Judges held, with reference to the doctrine prevalent in the English Courts as to fraud, that on this ground it was open to the parties to a document, and those who claimed under them, to show by subsequent conduct and by various circumstances of the case that the [900] document was not a conveyance but was a mortgage. This view has subsequently been accepted by the Chief Justice of this Court and MITTER, J., in Hem Chunder Soor v. Kally Churn Das (I. L. R. 9 Cal., 528) in which case the Chief Justice laid down the same doctrine as was affirmed in the Full Bench Ruling in Kashi Nath Chatterjee v. Chandi Churn Banerjee (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 383 : 5 W. R., 68), as being still the correct exposition of the law, and in which he expressed his general concurrence in the views of the Bombay High Court, as expressed in Baksu Lakshman v. Govinda Kanji (I. L. R., 4 Bom., 594).

We think, therefore, that the decision of the Court below in this case must be set aside ; and that it does not necessarily follow from s. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act that subsequent conduct and surrounding circumstances may not be given in evidence for the purpose of showing that what on the face of it is a conveyance is really a mortgage.

In applying this doctrine, however, it must be recollected that the rule turns on the fraud which is involved in the conduct of the person who is really a mortgagee, and who sets himself up as an absolute purchaser ; and that the rule of admitting evidence for the purpose of defeating this fraud would not apply to an innocent purchaser without notice of the existence of the mortgage, who merely bought from a person who was in possession of the title deeds and was the ostensible owner of the property.

We must, therefore, set aside the decision of the lower Appellate Court and remand the case to the learned Judge for trial with reference to the above observations and the ruling of this Court and the Bombay High Court on the subject.

Costs to abide the result.

Appeal allowed and case remanded.

[901] ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 3rd March, 1883.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE CUNNINGHAM.

G. Stephen.....One of the Defendants

versus

C. N. Stephen.....Plaintiff.

Act XL of 1858, s. 3—Minor—Certificate of administration—Majority—Majority Act (IX of 1875), s. 3.

A certificate of guardianship under Act XL of 1858 takes effect not from the date when it is applied for, nor when an order granting it is passed, but from the date when it is actually issued. Therefore where an application for a certificate was made in 1877, and an order granting it was passed in December 1879, but the certificate was not issued until December 1881, Held, that the minor, in respect of whose property the certificate was applied for, who had between the date of the application and the issue of the certificate attained the age of 18 years, and signed a promissory note, was not entitled to take advantage of s. 3 of the Majority Act, 1875, and set up the plea of minority as a defence to a suit on 'he note.

THIS was an appeal from a decision of WILSON, J., dated the 28th of March 1882. The suit was brought to recover the amount due on a promissory note executed on the 27th October 1880 by the appellant, together with two other persons. The appellant was born on the 7th of April 1861. In 1877 his father applied to the Dacca Court for a certificate of administration to his property, under s. 3 of Act XL of 1858. On the 10th December 1879 the Judge made an order granting the certificate; but it was not issued until the 10th of December 1881 which was the date it bore.

The only question in this appeal was whether the plaintiff was or was not a minor at the time he executed the note. WILSON, J., held that he was not then a minor. The judgment is reported in I. L. R., 8 Cal., 714.

Mr. T. A. Apcar for the appellant. The decision of this question depends on the date from which a certificate granted under Act XL of 1858 takes effect. If it can be said to take effect from the date it is applied for, the appellant, instead of attaining his majority at 18, would come under the provisions of s. 3* of the Majority Act 1875, and would be a minor until he was 21; but if it only has effect from the date of the order granting it, or from the date it [902] is issued, then the appellant was no doubt of age when this note was signed. The learned Judge in the Court below seems to have been under the impression that the appellant attained the age of 18 years between the date of the order granting the certificate and its actual issue, but that was not so; he attained the age of 18 years before the order granting the certificate. My contention is, however, that the certificate when granted is to be taken as dating back to the time of the application for it, as being the time at which the applicant may be said to have a right to it. Pending the application, therefore, it is submitted he would remain a minor for all purposes. The case of Chunee Mul Johary v. Brojo Nath Roy Chowdhry (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 967), was referred to.

Mr. Trevelyan for the respondent contended, that the mere fact that an application for a certificate was pending could not alter the period at which the minor would attain majority. The appellant ceased to be a minor when he attained 18, and after that the issue of a certificate would not be of any effect so as to make the Majority Act applicable to him, and so alter his status from one of majority to one of minority. The case of Monsoor Ali v. Ramdyal (3 W. R., 50) was referred to as to the effect of s. 26† of Act XL of 1858, and also Wilberforce on Statutes 48, and Maxwell on Statutes 73, to show that express words would be needed to take away vested rights.

Mr. Apcar in reply.

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and CUNNINGHAM, J.,) was delivered by Garth, C.J.—The defendant No. 3 is the sole appellant in this case, and the only ground of appeal is, that at the time when the promissory note was given, he, the defendant No. 3, was a minor.

The facts were these: The defendant No. 1 is the father of the defendant No. 3, and it appears that in September 1877, before the defendant No. 3 had attained the age of 18 years, the defendant No. 1 petitioned the District Judge of Dacca for a certificate of administration (under s. 3 of the Minor's Act XL of 1858) to the property of the defendant No. 3.

* [Sec. 3 :—Subject as aforesaid, every minor of whose person or property a guardian has been or shall be appointed by any Court of Justice, and every twenty-one years and not before: Subject as aforesaid, every other person domiciled in British India shall be deemed to have attained his majority when he shall have completed his age of eighteen years and not before.]

Person under the age of 18 years to be held minors for the purposes of this Act.

minor under the jurisdiction of any Court of Wards, shall, notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Succession Act (No. X of 1865) or in any other enactment, be deemed to have attained his majority when he shall have completed his age of 21 years.† [Sec. 26 :—For the purposes of this Act, every person shall be held to be a minor, who has not attained the age of eighteen years.]

[903] On the 10th of December 1879 the Judge made an order for a certificate of administration under that Act, and on the 10th December 1881 the certificate was issued.

But meanwhile, between September 1877 and the 10th of December 1879, when the Judge made the order, the defendant No. 3 had attained the age of 18 years; and the note in question was given on the 27th of October 1880, before the certificate was issued.

In this state of things the learned Judge in the Court below has held that the defendant No. 3 could not avail himself of the defence of minority; and I think he was right.

Section 3 of Act XL of 1858 enables any person who claims a right to have charge of the property of a minor under a will or deed to apply to the Civil Court for a certificate of administration. Section XI provides that, "whenever a Court shall grant a certificate of administration to the estate of a minor, it shall at the same time appoint a guardian to take charge of the person and maintenance of the minor;" and s. 18 further provides that "every person to whom a certificate shall have been granted under the provisions of this Act, may exercise the same powers in the management of the estate as might have been exercised by the proprietor if not a minor."

Then by s. 3 of the Indian Majority Act IX of 1875, it is enacted that "every minor of whose person or property a guardian has been or shall be appointed by any Court of Justice shall be deemed to have attained his majority when he shall have completed his age of 21 years and not before."

The question is, whether by the combined operation of the provisions of these two Acts, the defendant No. 3, at the time when he signed the note in question, was under the disability of minority.

In my opinion he was not.

In the first place I think that until the certificate has been actually issued the estate of the minor does not vest in the person who obtains the certificate, and if after the time when the minor comes of age, that is to say, attains the age of 18 years, and before the certificate is granted he enters into any contract, I consider that he is bound by such contract whether the certificate had been previously applied for or not.

[904] If this were not so, it seems to me that persons dealing with the minor after he had attained his full age would be placed in a most unfair position.

Suppose a certificate to be applied for on the 1st of January 1880, and that before the application is heard, say on the 1st February following, the minor attains his full age of 18. He enters upon the possession and management of his property, sells portions of it to bona fide purchasers, mortgages other portions, and has various dealings with various people who know perfectly well that he is of age, and have every reason to believe that they are at liberty to contract with him.

For some reason or other the application is not heard or the certificate granted (as in this case) for a year afterwards. Are all the minor's sales and other dealings to be avoided at his option or that of his guardian? It seems to me, that if that were the law, it would give rise to much injustice, and might frequently be made an instrument of fraud.

When a minor comes of age, and is entitled by law to take possession of and manage his property, the public have a right to deal and contract with him, and I see no reason why those contracts and dealings should be avoided, merely because the Court may afterwards appoint a guardian of his person or property.

Moreover I very much doubt whether the provisions of s. 3 of Act IX of 1875 were ever intended to apply to those cases, where a minor has actually attained his majority, before any certificate under Act XL has been granted. I think the language of the Act shews, that it is only intended to apply in cases where the person and property of the minor have been placed under the care of a guardian before he has attained his full age. If he has once attained that age, I am disposed to think that the provisions of the Act are not intended to have a retrospective effect, and to restore a person to the status of a minor, who has once attained his majority.

I, therefore, agree with the learned Judge of the Court below and consider that this appeal should be dismissed with costs on scale 2.

Appeal dismissed.

Attorney for the Appellant: Mr. Hume.

Attorney for the Respondent: Baboo O. C. Gangooly.

NOTES.

[I. WHEN AGE OF MAJORITY EXTENDED—

There was a conflict of decisions under XI. of 1858 as to when the age of majority was extended. The date of the issue of the order was held to be the decisive point, in (1883) 9 Cal., 901. This was followed in (1886) 13 Cal., 269; (1886) 12 Cal., 542; (1888) 13 Bom., 285. In the following cases, however, the date of the order itself was held to be decisive, see (1882) 8 Cal., 967; (1886) 14 Cal., 55; (1887) 15 Cal., 40.

The latter view would appear to be the better view from (1889) 17 Cal., 347=16 I. A., 195 P.C. reversing (1886) 12 Cal., 542.

Under the Guardian and Wards Act of 1890, no certificate is necessary.

II. EXTENSION OF AGE WHEN GUARDIAN IS APPOINTED BY COURT Etc.—

In accordance with the decision in this case, the Indian Majority Act IX of 1875 was amended in 1890 by Act VIII of 1890, sec. 52, by the insertion of the words, 'before the minor has attained the age of 18 years.'

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE
 MACPHERSON.

Debendra Nath Shaw and another.....Defendants

versus

Aubhoy Churn Bagehi.....Plaintiff. *

Appeal—Arbitration, Reference to —Award—Decree confirming award.

Where an award, i.e., a legal award, has been made, and judgment is passed in accordance therewith, the judgment is final; but where a question arises whether the award is a legal award or not, an appeal lies from a judgment of a Court passed in accordance with such award.

A case was referred to the arbitration of five persons, with a proviso that in the event of any two of the arbitrators being absent, the arbitration should be continued by the other three. Two of the arbitrators named were the pleaders on either side, and those two with the consent of the parties ceased to act as arbitrators, but argued the matter before the other arbitrators. Held that the award made by the other three arbitrators named was a valid award.

THE plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 1,850 from the defendants, alleging that the defendants had forcibly taken and retained Rs. 1,000, which he (the plaintiff) had intended to invest in the purchase of jute, and that he, through his inability to purchase the jute suffered a loss of Rs. 850.

The defendants denied having forcibly taken the money, but alleged that the plaintiff's servant had deposited it with them in satisfaction of a debt owing to them by the plaintiff.

After hearing the plaintiff's evidence, the matter was referred to the arbitration of five persons, the agreement providing that in the event of any two of the arbitrators named being absent, the arbitration should be continued by the remaining three.

Amongst the arbitrators named were the pleaders engaged by the parties; they, however, withdrew with the consent of the parties, and did not sit as arbitrators, but argued the case before the arbitrators.

[906] On the 9th August 1880, the arbitrators filed their award, the decision being in favour of the defendants. The plaintiff objected to the award, but the Subordinate Judge confirmed it.

The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge, who found that the award had only been signed by three of the arbitrators, and held that as the proviso regarding the absence of any of the arbitrators had not been complied with, inasmuch as the pleaders were present at the arbitration, and no steps had been taken under s. 510 of the Code to supply the place of the two pleaders, the appeal would lie, and reversed the order of the Subordinate Judge under s. 562.

The Defendants appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Kali Mohun Das for the Appellants contended that no appeal would lie from the award, and that the lower Court had no jurisdiction to set aside the decree of the first Court, except on one of the grounds mentioned in s. 521 of the Civil Procedure Code.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 415 of 1882, against the decree of C. A. Kelly, Esq., Judge of Pubna, dated the 24th February 1882, reversing the decree of Baboo Jibun Kristo Chatterjee, Sub-Judge of that District and Bogra, dated the 23rd August 1880.

Baboo Mohiny Mohun Roy for the Respondent.

The following Judgments were delivered by the Court (GARTH, C.J., and MACPHERSON, J.)

Garth, C.J.—I have had some doubt whether we have any right to entertain this appeal; but after considering the authorities, I think an appeal lies.

It is not easy (as observed by JACKSON, J.), to ascertain precisely what was the decision of the Full Bench in the case of Sushri Charan Chatterjee v. Tarak Chandra Chatterjee (8 B. L. R., 315), but it seems to me that the majority of the Judges at least decided this that when an award has been made and judgment is given by the first Court in accordance with that award, the judgment is final—(see s. 325 of the old Code, corresponding with s. 522 of the present Code), but that when there is no award, that is no legal award, then the judgment of the first Court is open to appeal. It seems to follow from this, that when the question is, whether the award is a legal award or not, an appeal lies from the judgment.

And that, as it seems to me, is the case here. The question [907] raised is, whether the three arbitrators under the circumstances had any power to make an award, or, in other words, whether the award which they made is a valid one. The first Court determined that it was valid, and gave judgment accordingly for the defendant No. 1; but the plaintiff appealed to the District Judge upon the question of the validity of the award, and he has reversed the decision of the Munsif, and declared the award invalid.

As he has decided this on a point of law, the defendant No. 1 comes to this Court on second appeal, and I think he has a right to do so. It now appears, that the question between the parties is this: The case was referred to the arbitration of five persons, but with a proviso that in case two of the arbitrators should be absent, the other three might make the award.

Now what occurred was this: Two of the arbitrators, it appears, were the pleaders on either side; and it was considered that as these gentlemen had acted as advocates, they could not with propriety act as arbitrators, so they ceased, (apparently with the consent of both parties), to act as arbitrators, and acted, as they had done before, as advocates on either side.

It seems to me, that this was virtually absenting themselves from their post as arbitrators; and as this was done apparently with the concurrence of the parties, I consider that the award made by the remaining three arbitrators was valid.

I think, therefore, that the decree of the lower Court should be reversed, and that of the Subordinate Judge restored with costs to the plaintiff in both Courts.

Macpherson, J.—I concur in decreeing this appeal. I much doubt whether the Judge was right in entertaining the appeal; as however he did entertain it, he was I think clearly wrong in holding the award to be invalid.

The reference clearly contemplated a decision by three out of the five arbitrators, if two were unable to attend. Two of them took no part in the arbitration with apparently the concurrence of the parties. I see no ground for holding the award to be invalid.

Appeal allowed.

[908] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 27th April, 1883.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE
MACPHERSON.

Surnomoyee.....Plaintiff

versus

Denonath Gir Sunnyasee and others.....Defendants.*

Landlord and Tenant—Settlement with tenant containing a clause of re-entry—Compensation in lieu of rent—Trespassers.

The plaintiff made a settlement of certain land with A and B for five years, there being in the settlement a stipulation that if the tenants failed to pay rent the plaintiff might accept another tenant.

A died during the tenancy, and B left the place and the property without paying rent, and thereupon the plaintiff entered into possession of the property and held khas possession of it for two years, when he in 1870 entered into a settlement of it with defendant No. 1 for six years.

In 1878 B died, and defendants Nos. 2 and 3 alleging themselves to be the chela and dasi-putra of B took upon themselves to collect rent from the tenants.

The plaintiff thereupon brought a suit against the three defendants, treating them as trespassers, but at the same time asked for the amount of rent due and for eviction.

Held, that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 had no right on the property at all, and that defendant No. 1, who might have been considered as holding over after the expiration of his lease, if he had been in actual sole possession, should not be made liable for the whole rent when defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were in possession as much as he was, but that as the plaintiff had elected to waive the trespass, all the defendants might, on the authority of Ranee Lalun Monee v. Sonu Monee Dabee (22 W. R., 334), and Luckhee Kant Dass Chowdhry v. Suneeruddi Lusker (13 B. L. R., 243 : 21 W. R. 208), be treated as tenants, and a decree for use and occupation given against them.

THIS was a suit for rent and for ejectment. The plaintiff stated that the jotes for which rent was claimed were in their nature "sarasari" or temporary, and that they were held originally by Ramdyal and Rajendra Gir Sunnyasee, who were the registered tenant; that the kabuliati contained a stipulation that if the tenants should fail to pay rent, then the zamindar might accept another tenant in their place and take rent from him; that Ramdyal died in [909] 1275 (1868), and after his death his brother Rajendra left the village without occupying the jotes, or paying rent to the plaintiff; and that in consequence of his relinquishment the plaintiff had entered into and had held khas possession till the year 1277 (1870). That on the 4th Pous 1277 (19th December 1870) the plaintiff entered into a settlement of these jotes for a term of five years, with the defendant No. 1, Denonath Gir Sunnyasee, the settlement containing a stipulation, that if the tenant should fail to pay rent, then the zamindar might put another tenant in possession and realize rent from him; that the defendant No. 1 in 1283 (1876) was not on good terms with his under-tenants, and had been unable to obtain payment of rent, and that the plaintiff had been compelled to bring suits against them, and had realized some of the arrears; that Rajendra died in 1285 (1878), and since his death the defendant No. 2, Raj Chundra Gir Sunnyasee, who alleged that he was a chela of Rajendra, and defendant No. 3, professing to be his dasi-putra, collected rents from the tenants.

The plaintiff therefore deemed them trespassers, as they had made no settlement with her nor had paid her any rent, and were alleged to have no transferable interest or mokurari right in the jotes, and brought this suit praying (1) for the amount of rent due, (2) for the eviction of the defendants, and (3) that the decree be given against the defendant No. 1, or against all the defendants or any one of them, and for other relief.

The defendant No. 1 contended that the jotes were transferable, and that he was in possession.

The defendant No. 2 contended that the jotes were mourasi mokurari and transferable, that he was the chela of Rajendra, and had obtained a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860 to collect his debts, and that he was in possession; that Rajendra did not relinquish and had obtained decrees for rent of his under-tenants.

The defendant No. 3 contended that, as Rajendra had a permanent right and interest in the jotes, his heirs, the minors in possession, could not be evicted, and that the prayers of the plaint were contradictory in their nature, and that the suits were no bona fide rent-suits.

The Subordinate Judge found that the defendant No. 2 was the tenant in possession in Rajendra's right as being his chela, and [910] that Rajendra's rights had never terminated, the tenure being transferable; that according to a custom the tenure had descended from each Gossami to his chela, and gave a decree for rent against him; and that the onus was on the plaintiff to show that the holders of the jotes were liable to eviction, and that she had failed in this.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Sreenath Doss, Baboo Gooroo Das Banerjee and Baboo Ganendra Nath Dass, for the Appellant.

No one appeared for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and MACPHERSON, J.) was delivered by

Garth, C.J.—This is a suit brought by the plaintiff, a zamindar, against three sets of defendants. Her claim is twofold (1st), for rent, cesses, and interest, amounting altogether to upwards of Rs. 5,000; and (2nd), for khas possession of the property in respect of which the rent is claimed.

The history of the case is this. Previously to the year 1870 the property, which is the subject of the suit, was held by a person named Rajendra Gir Gossami. He, and his predecessors before him who belonged to some religious order, had held the property in question, under settlements made from time to time with the zamindar, and the last of these settlements, made with Rajendra Gir, dated the 26th of Choitro 1267 (9th April 1861), was for a term of five years, from the commencement of 1268 (13th April 1861) to the end of 1272, (12th April 1866) at an annual rent of Rs. 674-0-1. In that settlement there was a provision to this effect: "If failing to pay the rent of the said jote, instalment per instalment (as it should be demanded), we allow the same to fall into arrear, then you will take out of our hand the said jote, put another tenant in possession, and have the rent realized from him."

Then it appears from the evidence, that in the year 1868 Rajendra Gir, in consequence of what he considered a disgrace attaching to him, left the place and the property, without making any arrangement with regard to the payment of his rent; and he never paid any rent afterwards. He remained away for two or [911] three years, and when he came back, he never made any attempt to resume possession of the jote, nor did he pay any rent to the zamindar.

The consequence was, that the zamindar, finding the property deserted, entered upon it under the provision in the lease and realized the rents directly from the ryots for some time, till at length he made a fresh settlement of the property with the defendant No. 1, who took it at an advanced rent of Rs. 975 a year. He held it at that rent for six years (which was the term of the lease), and it then seems very difficult to say who really was in possession. The defendant No. 1 says that he was; but the other defendants, each claiming under Rajendra Gir, laid claim to and asserted their right and possession, the defendant No. 2 being Rajendra's principal chela, and the defendant No. 3 his eldest son by a concubine. Each of these defendants laid claim to the interest which Rajendra had previously possessed.

So far as we can gather from the evidence, there has been a struggle ever since between these three defendants. One or other of them has been obtaining rents (as they could collect them) from the different ryots, and it is very difficult to say which of them has been really in possession; but this is certain, that between them these three persons have been setting the zamindar at defiance, and have entered into no agreement with her for payment of rent.

In this state of facts the lower Court has come to a decision which we cannot uphold. The Subordinate Judge has decided that the defendant No. 2, who is the chela of Rajendra, is the tenant in possession of the property in Rajendra's right; and that Rajendra's interest never in point of fact came to an end. From the fact of Rajendra and his predecessors in title having been in possession of the tenure for a great many years, and of its being a transferable tenure, he considers it to be of a permanent character. He further holds that by custom the tenure has descended from each succeeding Gossami to his chela; and he finds that the defendant No. 2, as being the chela of Rajendra, became entitled, upon Rajendra's death, [912] which occurred in the year 1878, to the interest which Rajendra had in the property.

He then finds that Raj Chundra, the defendant No. 2, is rightfully in possession as Rajendra's successor, and that he is entitled to hold at the old rent which Rajendra paid; and he gives the plaintiff a decree for rent at the old rate for the period in respect of which the claim is made.

We think it impossible to uphold this finding, because whatever was the true nature of Rajendra's tenancy, we think that the zamindar put an end to it in accordance with the clause of re-entry in the lease.

The clause in the lease which I have just read provides that if the rent of the jote falls into arrear, the zamindar is to be at liberty to re-enter upon the property, and put any other tenant in possession, and realize rent from him.

Now, considering that Rajendra actually deserted the property, left the neighbourhood for upwards of two years, and never afterwards paid any rent, it seems to us impossible to say, that the zamindar was not at liberty to take advantage of this clause in the lease, and to re-enter upon the property.

He did re-enter, and he did hold khas possession for some time, receiving rent from the occupying ryots. He then granted a lease of it to the defendant No. 1 at an increased rent. That seems to us to have put an end to Rajendra's interest, and to have effectually debarred Rajendra's chela or son from any right to it in the future.

That being so, we find the state of things to be this : That during the time for which the plaintiff seeks to recover rent in this suit, the defendants Nos. 1, 2, and 3 were all more or less in possession of the property without any right to it ; consequently they were all trespassers. The defendants Nos. 2 and 3 had no right there at all, and the defendant No. 1, who might have been considered as holding on after the expiration of his lease, if he had been in actual possession, can hardly be made liable for rent upon that footing when the other defendants were in possession as much as he was. They are, therefore, all trespassers upon the property.

Then the difficulty is, what relief the plaintiff is entitled to in [913] this suit. She sues all the defendants for rent, and for ejectment. We may, no doubt, treat the defendants as trespassers and eject them, but then we can give the plaintiff no mesne profits.

If the plaintiff had sued for mesne profits as well as for khas possession, we could have given her a decree ; but she has not asked for mesne profits ; and we should have great difficulty in giving her mesne profits after the commencement of this suit, because we do not know who has been in possession since that time.

But the learned pleader for the appellant contends that, although none of the defendants are liable for any definite amount of rent, we are at liberty, in accordance with certain decisions to which our attention has been called, to give the plaintiff a fair compensation for the use and occupation of the land ; and that the plaintiff is entitled to this against all three defendants, who have all been in joint possession of the property.

One case to which he has referred us in support of this view is Ranee Lalun Monee v. Sona Monee Dabee (22 W. R., 334). That was a case where there was a difficulty in giving the plaintiff a decree for rent, properly so called ; but the Court thought the plaintiff entitled to some compensation from the defendants for the use of the land, and the case was sent back to the lower Court to ascertain the amount. Mr. Justice JACKSON, in giving judgment, says : " If these parties (meaning the defendants) are in possession, they make themselves tenants by use and occupation of the land."

The other was a Full Bench case of Lukhee Kant Doss Chowdhry v. Sumee-ruddi Lusker (13 B. L. R., 243 : 21 W. R., 20). There the landlord sued a ryot for rent alleged to be due under a kabulait, but when the case came to trial, the plaintiff was unable to prove the kabuliat. Then the question arose, whether, as the defendant had occupied the land under the zamindar, the latter was entitled to recover some rent or compensation for the use of the land, the amount to be ascertained by the Court ; and the Judges held that he was so entitled, and that the case should be remanded to the lower Court to ascertain the proper amount.

[914] As the plaintiff is willing in this case to waive the trespass and to treat the defendants as her tenants, we think that upon the authority of these cases we may give the plaintiff a decree for use and occupation. It is a difficult thing to say what amount we should give. Properly speaking, we ought to have further evidence upon that point, but having regard to the evidence already before the Court, we think we may safely give the plaintiff as against all the defendants the same sum which the lower Court has awarded against the defendant No. 2 ; and we also give the same sum which the lower Court has given for interest upon the amount decreed as from the commencement of the suit.

We are, of course, not in a position to give the plaintiff a decree for ejectment. We could only have given her such a decree if she had elected to treat the defendants as trespassers : as she has elected to treat them as tenants, she can only put an end to their tenancy by a notice to quit. She cannot treat them as tenants and trespassers in the same suit.

The plaintiff will have her costs in this Court from all the defendants.

Appeal allowed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 7th May, 1883.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE
MACPHERSON.

Rookminy Bullub Roy.....Plaintiff

Mulk Jamaniah Begum.....Defendant.*

Nawab Nazim's Debts' Act (XVII of 1873), s. 11 Agreement for appropriation of payments Contract Act IX of 1872), s. 60 -Account.

So far as the Nawab Nazim's Debts' Act is concerned, rent due by the Nawab is on the same footing as any other debt incurred by him and before his property can be made liable to satisfy such rent debt, the consent of the Governor-General in Council must first be obtained to the issue of execution.

THIS was a suit for rent for the year 1284 (1877) and part of the year 1285 (1878).

[915] The plaintiff stated that her mother formerly was in possession of the mehal, and that whilst so in possession the Nawab Nazim of Bengal took a patni settlement of the mehal on the 6th Pous 1265 (21st December 1858); that the rents fell into arrear, and the patni right was put up to sale, and was purchased by the Nawab in the name of one Joy Sunker Roy; that the Nawab by a deed of gift made over his rights to his wife (the defendant in the suit). That on the death of his mother the plaintiff took possession of the said mehal on the 21st February 1881, and brought this present suit against the defendant (the wife of the Nawab) for rent for the year 1284 and part of the year 1285.

At the hearing the plaintiff and defendant agreed that the question was one of account, and in consequence the pleader of the plaintiff drew up an account, which was agreed to by the defendant, subject to one item of Rs. 390, which was in deposit in the office of the Agent to the Governor-General, which the defendant contended was paid as Government revenue to save the mehal from sale, the plaintiff contending that he was at liberty to appropriate it to the discharge of the rent for 1283 (1876), which otherwise was barred by limitation.

The defendant further contended that the suit would not lie, having regard to s. 11 of the Nawab Nazim's Act of 1873.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 336 of 1882 against the decree of A. J. R. Bainbridge, Esq., Judge of Moorshedabad, dated the 5th January 1882 affirming the decree of Baboo Mohendra Nath Mitter, Acting Sub-Judge of that district, dated the 1st July 1881.

The Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiff was not at liberty to claim the sum of Rs. 390 towards payment of the rent for 1283, and that s. 11 of the Nawab Nazim's Act of 1873 was no bar to the plaintiff bringing a suit against the Nawab's wife; all that could be contended being that in execution of the decree no writ or process could be issued against the taluk, and he therefore gave the plaintiff a decree for rent for the years 1284 and 1285, ordering that execution should not issue against the taluk, until the consent of the Governor-General in Council should be obtained.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court

Baboo Mohing Mohun Roy (with him Baboo Bama Churn Banerjee) for the appellant contended that he was entitled to apply the payments made by the plaintiff to the liquidation of the earliest debt due to the plaintiff, which he would be entitled to do under s. 60 of the [916] Contract Act, because the plaintiff's pleader had consented to make an account in accordance with the suggestion of the Court; and that the Court below was wrong in holding that the tenure itself was not liable to be put up for sale for its own arrears and had erred in its construction of the Nawab Nazim's Act XVII of 1873.

Baboo Jugdanund Mookerjee and Baboo Guru Das Banerjee for the Respondents contended that the Nawab's Act was not intended to apply to rent debts, but to debts of a different nature.

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and MACPHERSON, J.) was delivered by Garth, C.J. This suit was brought by the plaintiff, a zamindar, against the wife of the Nawab Nazim of Bengal, for rent of a patni for the year 1284 and part of the year 1285.

The defendant holds the patni under a grant from the Nawab Nazim, and for the purposes of this suit is in the same position as the Nawab himself would be.

The question between the parties turned out to be a matter of account; and in determining that question one point, which was raised by the plaintiff, was, that certain sums, which were admittedly paid by the defendant to the Government for revenue in the year 1284, and which the plaintiff ought to have paid himself, ought to be considered (as payments made by the defendant to the plaintiff), and as such might be appropriated by the plaintiff in discharge of the rent of the year 1283, which otherwise was barred by limitation. The plaintiff in this suit did not claim any rent for the year 1283.

The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the plaintiff had no right to appropriate these sums towards payment of the rent of 1283; and he therefore directed the parties to try and settle an account between themselves of the debits and credits for the years 1284 and 1285, excluding from the account the rent of 1283. The result was that the parties virtually came to an agreement, (except as to a sum which is now not in question), and the Subordinate Judge made a decree accordingly in favour of the plaintiff for Rs. 1,359-9-11.

That decree was appealed to the District Judge, and he seems to have considered that, as the parties had agreed to [917] the account in the Court below, he ought not to interfere; so he dismissed the appeal with costs.

I should mention, however, that another point was raised in the Courts, below, which I shall deal with presently, namely, as to how far Act XVII of 1873, which is called the "Nawab Nazim's Debts' Act," applies in this suit for the purpose of protecting the tenure, in respect of which rent is claimed, from being sold in execution.

The main point which has been pressed upon us in this appeal by the learned pleader for the plaintiff is, that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that the payments of revenue which were made by the defendant for the plaintiff in the year 1284 were not payments to the plaintiff in such suit, as to give the latter a right to appropriate them to the discharge of the rent of 1283 under ss. 59 to 61st of the Indian Contract Act.

These sections merely enact the English law with regard to the appropriation of payments; and it is contended that if the payments of revenue made by the defendant to the Government can be considered as payments made to the zamindar, the plaintiff has a right to appropriate them to the discharge of the rent of 1283, and that in the absence of any specific appropriation they would naturally under s. 61 be appropriated to the payment of the earlier arrears of rent.

Now, assuming that we could consider these payments as made to the zamindar, I am not prepared to say that the appellant would not be right in his contention; but it seems to us impossible to consider them in that light. They are in reality the proper subject of set-off. They are payments made by the defendant to the Government, because the plaintiff would not pay them himself. They were made for the purpose of preventing the property being sold, and they were, therefore, moneys paid for the use of the plaintiff, and recoverable as such against him by the defendant. These sections, therefore, of the Contract Act, with regard to the appropriation of payments, are not applicable to the case at all.

The learned pleader for the appellant then argues that, if they are the subject of set-off it is wrong to allow them to be used [918] by the defendant in this suit, because, at the commencement of this suit, they were not moneys legally recoverable against the plaintiff. (See s. 111 of the Civil Procedure Code).

We think, however, that s. 111 was never intended to enact any new law as to what is, or is not, the subject of set-off. It merely means to lay down rules as to the way in which subjects of set-off can be made available. That being so it seems to us that we have nothing further to decide; because, subject to the correctness of the point which was decided by the Subordinate Judge, it seems clear that the parties agreed to the account, which was the basis of the judgment of the lower Courts. Both the lower Courts evidently considered that to be so.

The other point raised in the case related rather to the execution of the decree than to the decree itself.

It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that he is entitled to proceed to sell this tenure, which is part of the property of the Nawab Nazim of Bengal, in the ordinary course of execution; and that he is not bound in that respect by the provisions of Act XVII of 1873.

*[Sec. 59 :- Where a debtor, owing several distinct debts to one person, makes a payment to him, either with express intimation or under circumstances implying, that the payment is to be applied to the discharge of some particular debt, the payment, if accepted, must be applied accordingly.]

Application of payment where debt to be discharged is indicated.

Sec. 60 :- Where the debtor has omitted to intimate, and there are no other circumstances indicating, to which debt the payment is to be applied, the creditor may apply it at his discretion to any lawful debt actually due and payable to him from the debtor whether its recovery is or is not barred by the law in force for the time being as to the limitation of suits.

Application of payment where debt to be discharged is not indicated.

Sec. 61 -Where neither party makes any appropriation, the payment shall be applied in discharge of the debts in order of time, whether they are or are not barred by the law in force for the time being as to the limitation of suits. If the debts are of equal standing, the payment shall be applied in discharge of each proportionately.]

Application of payment where neither party makes appropriation.

The 11th section of the Act, to which we have been referred, provides that "no suit shall be commenced or prosecuted, and no writ or process shall at any time be sued for against the person or property of the said Nawab Nazim, unless such suit be commenced, or such writ or process be sued for, with the consent of the Governor-General in Council first had and obtained;" and "any suit which at any time shall have been, or shall be commenced, and any writ or process which at any time shall have been or shall be sued for, against the person or property of the said Nawab Nazim, shall be of no effect, unless and until the consent of the Governor-General in Council certified in manner aforesaid is obtained."

The contention of the defendant is that, having regard to this section, the plaintiff has no right to execute his decree in this suit against the property in question without the consent of the Governor-General in Council.

On the other hand, the plaintiff contends that this section has no application to a case of this kind; because this is a suit for [919] rent, and the Act was not intended to apply to debts for rent but to debts of a different nature.

It seems to us, however, that this is just one of those cases in which the Legislature intended to protect the property of the Nawab Nazim. These two taluks formed part of his estates; and it was for the purpose of protecting those estates and of preventing their sale, that this Act was passed. A debt for rent is like any other debt; and we quite agree with the lower Courts that the consent of the Governor-General in Council will be necessary before the plaintiff can sell the property in execution. This appeal will, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 42, 43 -- Enhancement of rent, Suit for— Subsequent suit for rent.

Under ss. 42 and 43 of the Civil Procedure Code, plaintiffs must bring their entire claim and every remedy enforceable in respect of that claim into Court at once, and if they fail to do that in any suit, they cannot afterwards avail themselves of any remedy on which they have not chosen to insist in the first suit. Suits for enhanced rent, and suits for rent, are claims arising in respect of the same subject-matter, and a plaintiff cannot be allowed, after having unsuccessfully sued for rent at an enhanced rate, to sue for the original rent for previous years.

Baboo Bamu Churn Banerjee for the Appellant.

Baboo Sree Nath Dass for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 944 of 1882, against the decree of W. Macpherson, Esq., Judge of the 24-Pergunnas, dated the 10th March 1882, modifying the decree of Baboo Grish Chunder Chatterjee, Second Munsif of Satkherra, dated the 30th June 1881.

Cunningham, J.—The question raised in this appeal is whether the plaintiff, having sued for enhanced rent for the year 1286 (1879), can now sue for the original rent for the years 1284, 1285 and 1286 (1877, 1878, and 1879).

[920] The lower Appellate Court has found that the one action is no bar to the other. We feel it impossible to concur in this opinion. It appears to us that, looking at the wording of ss. 42 and 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is clearly the intention of the Legislature that plaintiffs should bring their entire claim and every remedy enforceable in respect of that claim into Court at once, and that if they fail to do that in any suit, they cannot afterwards avail themselves of any other remedy on which they have not chosen to insist in the first suit.

It is true that the Privy Council have pointed out that a suit for enhanced rent and a suit for rent are very different proceedings. None the less are they, in our opinion, remedies or claims arising in respect of the same subject-matter. This being so, we think they fall within the purview of s. 43, and that the plaintiff, not having chosen to put forward this claim for rent of the years 1284, 1285 and 1286 at the original rate in the former suit, is now barred from suing for that rent in the present suit. We think, therefore, that the decision of the lower Appellate Court must be set aside and that the suit must be dismissed with costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 5th June, 1883.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE MITTER.

Shumbhoo Nath Poddar.....Plaintiff

Luckynath Dey and others.....Defendants.*

Rateable distribution amongst decree-holders.

Where property belonging to A has been attached under a decree, and other decree-holders than the attaching creditor have applied before realization of assets to participate in the sale proceeds, and amongst them a creditor who has obtained a decree against A and B, such latter creditor is entitled under s. 295 to share in the proceeds of the sale of A's property.

THIS case was originally filed and decided in 1880, and the regular and special appeal thereon decided on the 30th May 1881 and 19th July 1882 respectively. The case then came up on appeal [921] under the Letters Patent, and the question arising in the appeal, so far as is sufficient for the purposes of this report, is set out in the judgment of GARTH, C.J.

Baboo Grish Chunder Chowdhry for the Appellant.

Munshi Serajul Islam for the Respondents.

* Appeal under s. 15 of the Letters Patent against the decree of Mr. Justice FIELD, dated the 19th July 1882, in appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1508 of 1881.

The following Judgments were delivered :—

Garth, C.J. —This was a Letters Patent Appeal from a decision of Mr. Justice FIELD, confirming the judgments of both the lower Courts. The question depends upon what is the proper construction to be put upon s. 295 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The appeal was heard some time ago ; but it stood over for a time, until Mr. Justice FIELD and myself had decided a case (second appeal No. 211 of 1882) which was supposed to involve a somewhat similar question under s. 246 of the Code.

That case has now been decided (Hury Dayal Guho v. Din Doyal Guho, ante, p. 479), but the decision will not much assist us in the solution of the present question, which is this : whether, when assets have been realized by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree, and more persons than one have prior to the realization applied to the Court, by which such assets are held, for execution of decrees for money against the same judgment-debtor, the assets are to be divided among such persons, although the decrees under which they claim may not have been obtained against the same person.

To put the question, as it was put by Mr. Justice FIELD in the Court below : Suppose that there were one decree against A, and another decree against A and B, and that the decree-holders in both cases had applied for execution against A, but that execution had been taken out and assets realized in one case only, would the decree-holders under both decrees be entitled to a rateable share of the assets ; or, in other words, is that a case which would come within s. 295 ? I think that this question should be answered in the affirmative. It is clear that, as a matter of justice, the decree-holder in the one case has as much right to take out execution against A, as the decree-holder in the other case ; and the evident object of the [922] Legislature is to prevent any one decree-holder obtaining an undue advantage over another, when they have both applied for and are both entitled to execution against the same person.

It cannot matter under such circumstances that one decree-holder has a right to proceed against other judgment-debtors, and that the other decree-holder has not. So long as execution may be taken out by both against one and the same judgment-debtor, it cannot signify against what other judgment-debtors the decrees may have been obtained.

I think, therefore, that the judgments of the Court below should be reversed, and that the plaintiff should be declared entitled to a rateable division of the sale proceeds with the defendants. The plaintiff will have his costs in all the Courts.

Mitter, J. —I am also of the same opinion.

There cannot be the slightest doubt, that the governing intention of the Legislature in s. 295 is that there should be an equitable distribution of the assets realized by the sale of a judgment-debtor's property, amongst such of his judgment-creditors as have been diligent enough to apply for execution against him before the realization.

The present case falls within this intention, but the lower Courts are of opinion that it does not come within the language used by the Legislature ; they think that the words "the same judgment-debtors" are governed by the word "decrees," and that therefore all the judgment-debtors must be common in all the decrees. But that this is not the correct construction of the section appears from the fourth clause of its last proviso. There can be no question that the fourth clause covers all cases of the sale of immovable property which are covered by the main portion of the section. The word "same" does not occur here, and it is evident that the words "the judgment-debtors" here refer to the judgment-debtor whose immovable property has been sold in execution of a decree. Similarly the words "the same judgment-debtor" in the first portion of the section refer to the judgment-debtor or the judgment-debtors, whose property has been sold in execution of a decree.

Appeal allowed.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE PIGOT.

Khajah Assenoolla Joo

versus

Khajah Abdool Aziz and others.

Practice— Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of s. 1882), s. 136—Non-compliance with order for production of documents—Defence struck out.

Where a defendant neglects to comply with an order for production and inspection, the Court will, although in the last resort, order his defence to be struck out.

THIS was a suit praying that the first defendant might be ordered to bring into Court probate of an alleged will of one Khajah Golan Moheooddeen (deceased) to try the factum and validity thereof, and for a declaration that the plaintiff was entitled to a share in the estate of the deceased and for an injunction.

The defendant entered appearance and filed his written statement on the 11th December 1882. On the 8th January 1883 the usual order for production of documents was made, and the same was served on the 12th January on the defendant's attorneys.

The defendant on the 18th January filed his affidavit verifying a list of documents in his possession. The plaintiff experiencing difficulty in obtaining proper inspection of the books produced, moved the Court, and on the 29th March 1883 obtained an order directing the defendant to produce and leave at the office of the Registrar within a certain period certain books and documents, amongst which were certain books in Cashmere relating to the years 1270 to 1277 (1863 to 1870), the plaintiff to have liberty to inspect and peruse the same.

The above order was served personally on the defendant as well as on his attorneys on the 27th April. On the 30th May the defendant produced certain books from Umritsur, and made them over to the Registrar, but the plaintiff was unable to obtain inspection of the same owing to the continued absence of the defendant. After a prolonged correspondence between the plaintiff's and defendant's attorneys on the matter, the former received on the 2nd July a letter from the latter saying that "you can inspect the Umritsur books in the Registry Office whenever you chose [924] to make an appointment to do so; our client's inspection must be dispensed with." The Registrar, however, would not allow inspection until the defendant should have made a list of the documents. The defendant altogether failed to comply with the order of the 29th March, as regards the Cashmere books, the time for such production having long passed.

The plaintiff, therefore, applied to Mr. Justice NORRIS in Chambers for a summons on the 17th July 1883, calling upon the defendant to appear in Chambers on the 20th July to show cause why he should not, within 48 hours from the order, comply with the order of the 29th March 1883 by leaving and producing the Cashmere books at the Registrar's Office, and why in default of his compliance therewith his defence should not be struck off.

The above summons was duly served on the defendant's attorneys, but the defendant put in no appearance as directed by the summons.

Thereupon the plaintiff applied in Chambers for an order in terms of the summons, and Mr. Justice NORRIS adjourned the matter into Court.

Mr. Hill for the plaintiff applied under s. 136 of the Code of Civil Procedure that the defendant's defence might be struck out, stating that he was not aware that any similar application had ever been made in this Court; the section was taken from the English Order XXXI, rule No. 20 of the Judicature Act, and having regard to the serious consequences to the defendant the Court would necessarily be reluctant to exercise the discretion conferred on it, except in extreme cases; see Twycroft v. Grant (W. N. for 1875, p. 201), in which LUSH, J., held that he would only exercise the powers conferred by the rule in the last resort; there, however, an explanation was offered for the non-compliance with the order, and it was said that the defendant was willing to answer the interrogatories within a week, whereas upon the affidavit now before the Court the defendant's whereabouts was unknown even to his attorney, and the latter was wholly uninstructed.

In England the party against whom such an order is made would, it seems, be entitled to come in and ask that the order [925] might be set aside on showing sufficient grounds for such an application; and in this case the order will not be very prejudicial to the defendant.

Pigot, J., made an order striking out the defence of Khajah Abdool Aziz under s. 136 of the Code in consequence of his non-compliance with the order of the 29th March 1883; and at the same time mentioned that the party against whom the order was made might come in and seek to set it aside on showing good grounds for the application.

Attorneys for the Plaintiff: Messrs. Remfry and Remfry.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 29th May, 1883.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND
MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON.Jugut Shobhun Chunder alias Doolal Chunder Dehingur
Gossamy.....Plaintiff*versus*Binaud Chunder alias Soda Shobhun Chunder Dehingur
Gossamy and another.....Defendants.Jurisdiction of Revenue Courts—Question of title—Registration of names—Declaratory decree, Suit for.*

It is not the province of a Revenue Court to decide questions of title between contending claimants, such questions being within the province of the Civil Courts. It is the duty of the latter in suits brought for declaration of a right to registration to declare the rights of parties in order that the revenue authorities may be duly certified as to the persons whom they ought to register.

IN this case the plaintiff sued to get his name registered on the revenue rolls as a joint holder with his brother, defendant No. 1, in respect of 311 bighas of ancestral lands.

The plaintiff stated that after his father's death in 1277 (1870), he and his brother, defendant No. 1, inherited their father's estate; that at that time both of them were minors, and the lands in [926] question were recorded in the name of their step-mother; that after the death of their step-mother, defendant No. 1, who had attained majority, became the guardian of his minor brother, and applied for and obtained a certificate to collect and receive the amounts due to their father, and further applied to the Collector to have his name registered in respect of his father's ancestral property, and accordingly obtained a pottah in his own name of all these properties; that on the 25th Pous 1285 (10th January 1879) he (the plaintiff) attained his majority, and separated from defendant No. 1, and took ijmali possession of a share of the lands in suit. That defendant No. 1, in order to establish his exclusive right over all the ancestral property, brought a suit against certain tenants to eject them from their holdings; that he (the plaintiff) thereupon applied to the Revenue Court to have his name recorded as a joint holder of these lands with his brother, but his application was refused both in the first Court and on appeal in the Chief Commissioner's Court: and that he thereupon brought this suit against defendant No. 1 and the Deputy Commissioner for declaration of his title and the recording of his name jointly with that of his brother on the revenue rolls.

Defendant No. 1 stated that the plaintiff was not in possession, and that a suit for a declaratory decree would not lie; and he further denied plaintiff's claim to any portion of the land, the land not being subject to the ordinary Hindu law of inheritance.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1883 of 1881 against the decree of W. E. Ward, Esq., Judge of Assam Valley District, dated the 13th June 1881, reversing the decree of Baboo Shibo Persad Chuckerbutty, Sudder Munsiff of Gauhatty, dated the 14th December 1880.

Defendant No. 2 stated that he had no interest in the suit and asked for costs.

The Assistant Commissioner found that the lands were ancestral; that the plaintiff had been in possession of the land in suit jointly with his brother, and decided the case in favour of the plaintiff, ordering that the properties claimed by the plaintiff be declared his paternal properties, and he be entitled to get his name registered in respect of a half share therein.

The defendant No. 1 appealed to the Judge of the Valley District of Assam, who, without going into the merits of the case, dismissed the appeal on the ground that the plaint disclosed no cause of action, stating that the plaintiff, being in possession and enjoyment of the lands in suit, the Chief Commissioner's order refusing to register his name as a joint holder with his brother threw no [927] cloud upon the plaintiff's title; and further that the Court had not the power to pass such an order against the revenue authorities as was asked for in the plaint.

The Plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C. J., and MACPHERSON, J.) was delivered by Garth, C. J.—In this case, which is somewhat similar in its nature to others which have been appealed from the Assam Valley Districts, we are sorry to find that the District Judge has again taken an erroneous view of the law.

The plaintiff sued to have it declared that he is entitled to an eight-anna share in certain immoveable property, and to have his name registered as the owner of that share in the Revenue Court.

His case is, that his father was the owner of the property in question, and that he and his brother, the defendant No. 1, inherited it in equal shares. At the time of his father's death, which occurred on the 2nd of Joisto 1277 (17th May 1870), the plaintiff and his brother were both minors, and consequently their step-mother, Chunder Coomary, who appears to have acted as their guardian, had her name recorded in the Revenue Court as the owner of one portion of the property, whilst another portion remained in the name of the plaintiff's father, to whom a pottah had been granted.

Chunder Coomary died whilst the plaintiff was still a minor, but his brother, the defendant No. 1, had then attained majority, and he became the plaintiff's guardian after the step-mother's death.

He then applied to the Judge's Court for a certificate authorizing him to collect the amounts due to their father; and taking advantage of his position as the plaintiff's guardian, he also applied to the Collector to have his name recorded as the sole owner of the property, which stood in the names of Chunder Coomary and of his father. His application was granted, and he obtained a pottah, conveying the property to himself alone.

[928] The plaintiff then says that afterwards upon attaining his majority, he separated from his brother, the defendant No. 1, on the 25th of Pous 1285 (10th January 1879); and that he has since been in ijmali possession of a share of the lands in suit.

He then alleges that the defendant No. 1, with a view of excluding him from his interest in those lands, took proceedings in his own name to eject the tenants; whereupon the plaintiff, for his own protection, applied to the Revenue

Court to have his name registered as the owner of an eight-anna share in the property ; but in consequence of objections raised by the defendant No. 1 the Deputy Commissioner refused to register him.

He then appealed to the Commissioner, who confirmed the order, but advised the plaintiff to bring a civil suit. This was no doubt his proper remedy ; and he did bring this suit on the 2nd of July 1880. The defendant No. 1 alleges (amongst other things) that the plaintiff has no interest in the lands in suit.

The Assistant Commissioner, after going into the case very carefully, decided in the plaintiff's favour, and gave him a decree, declaring that he was entitled to an eight-anna share of a part of the property in question, and to have his name registered as the owner of that share.

The defendant No. 1 appealed from that decree ; and the District Judge, apparently without going into the evidence, or considering the judgment of the first Court, held that the plaint disclosed no cause of action, and refused to try the appeal upon its merits.

The District Judge goes on to say, what of course is very true in a literal sense, that the Civil Court has no power to make a binding order upon the revenue authorities in the manner prayed for in the plaint ; but I think if he had only exercised a little of the discretion, which was shown by the first Court, he would have had no difficulty in making such a decree as would have given the plaintiff all the relief which he could properly ask, if after an investigation on the merits he considered him entitled to it ; that is to say, a decree declaring what his rights were, leaving it to the revenue authorities to register him, if they thought fit, in respect of those rights.

Suits of this kind are extremely useful, and of every-day [929] occurrence in this province. It no doubt sometimes happens that plaintiffs, through ignorance or mistake, ask for an order upon the Collector, which the Civil Courts have no power to make ; but that is a mere formal error, which it is the duty of the Judge to correct ; and if he finds upon the evidence that the plaintiff is entitled to the right which he claims, and that the case is one in which a declaratory decree can legally be made, he ought to make such a decree, and then leave it to the revenue authorities to do their duty in the matter.

I observe the District Judge says, that " the revenue authorities in Assam are not legally bound to register the names of all the joint shareholders in a pottah."

I can only say that if this is so, and if the revenue authorities in Assam are at liberty to prefer the claims of any one shareholder in a property, and to register him as the sole owner, to the exclusion of the others, notwithstanding any declaration which may be made by the Civil Court to the contrary, I am afraid that the Revenue Court, instead of being of any service to the public, must of necessity often become an instrument of fraud and oppression ; and if that is the state of the law in Assam, I think the sooner the notice of the Supreme Government is called to it, the better.

It is not, of course, the province of the Revenue Court to decide questions of title between contending claimants. It has neither the knowledge of law, nor the proper machinery, to decide such questions. That is obviously the province of the Civil Courts ; and their duty, as I understand it, is to declare the rights of parties, in order that the revenue authorities may be duly certified as to the person whom they ought to register.

Unless this were so, I see no reason why the Collector or the Commissioner in Assam should constantly refer parties, (as the Commissioner has done in the present instance), to the Civil Court. It would seem nothing short of mockery to refer a claimant to the Civil Court, and when he has sued there, and had his rights declared, to inform him that the Revenue Court cannot recognize those rights.

The plaintiff in this case has sufficiently explained his title upon the face of his plaint. He has shown how those rights are [930] likely to be jeopardized by the exclusive claim to the property which is made by his brother, and the proceedings which the latter has taken with a view to exclude him from his property. It is obvious from the written statement of the defendant No. 1, and from the judgment of the first Court, that the latter denies the plaintiff's title, and means to oust him if he can, and the case is therefore one which comes directly within the scope of s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act.

The case must therefore be remanded to the lower Appellate Court, in order that the merits of the case may be properly investigated, and the plaintiff's rights declared with a view to registration.

There is nothing in the case referred to by the District Judge which is opposed to this view, because in that case, as explained by the High Court, the plaintiff was not in a position to sue for declaratory decree.

There have been several other cases since the year 1879, which have come up in appeal from Assam, and in which, I regret to say, this Court has been constrained to express its disapproval of the law which has been laid down by the District Judge. (See Kalindi Dabia v. Komola Kanto Surma (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 437); Hootaboo Ravah v. Loom Ravah (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 440). Berjoy Keot v. Goria Keot (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 439); Purnamal Deka Kohla v. Mayaram Deka Kohla; and (10 C. L. R., 201). Shiboram Surma v. Juggeram Surma (No. 138 of 1881 not reported).

The costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court will abide the result.

Case remanded.

Sale for arrears of rent—Reg. VIII of 1819, s. 8—Due publication of Notice of Sale.

Where there is a cutcheri upon the land of a defaulting patnidar the notice required by s. 8 of Reg. VIII of 1819 must be served there; but where there is no such cutcheri, the notice should be published, in the manner required by the section, at the principal town or village within the taluk.

THIS was a reference by GARTH, C.J., and MACPHERSON, J., to a Full Bench. The referring order was as follows:—

* Full Bench Reference, No. 82 of 1882, from the original decision of the Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, dated 3rd December 1881.

This suit was brought to set aside the sale of a patni taluk under Regulation VIII of 1819; and one of the grounds relied upon by the plaintiff was, that notice of the sale had not been duly published.

The question was, whether there had been a sufficient compliance with the provision of s. 8, which requires that "a copy of the notice shall be sent to be similarly published at the cutcheri or at the principal town or village upon the land of the defaulter.

The patni taluk in question was called Lot Amarpur; and as the defaulting patnidar had other properties in the neighbourhood of that taluk, he had a small mal cutcheri on the land of this taluk, and another dihi cutcheri at a village called Mahanad, some eight or nine miles distant from the confines of Lot Amarpur.

At this latter cutcheri his principal business was transacted, including that of Lot Amarpur, and it appeared that two durpatnidars, who were the largest tenants on Lot Amarpur, were always, in the habit of paying their rents at the dihi cutcheri.

The other cutcheri within the taluk was used for the purpose of receiving the rents of the smaller tenants, which, when received, were paid into the dihi cutcheri at Mahanad.

[932] The notice in this case was taken to the Mahanad cutcheri, and the serving peon gave it into the hands of one of the amlas at that cutcheri in the presence of the defaulting patnidar and obtained a receipt.

It was contended by the plaintiff, who is a co-sharer to the extent of eight annas in the patni, that this service was bad.

1st.—Because the cutcheri at Amarpur was the one at which the zamindar was bound to serve the notice; and 2ndly.—Because it was delivered to one of the amlas, instead of being stuck up on the wall of the cutcheri.

As regards the first point, it was held in the case of Mungazee Chaprassee v. Shibo Sunduree (21 W. R., 369), that the cutcheri at which the notice should be served need not be within the patni as long as it was adjacent to it and upon the land of the defaulter—See also to the same effect Lotfonissa v. Kowar Ram Chunder (S. D. A., 1849, p. 371), and Gouree Lall Singh v. Joodhisteer Hajrah (I. L. R., 1 Cal., 359: 25 W. R., 141), where the service of the notice appears to have been effected at the house of the defaulter.

We entertain some doubt, whether, so long as there is a cutcheri or a town or village of the defaulter upon the land of the taluk, the service of the notice can be effectually made otherwise than upon the land of the taluk.

With regard to the second point, the words of the section seem to leave it doubtful whether the service must be published by sticking it up on the walls of the cutcheri, or whether it may be delivered to some person at the cutcheri for that purpose; and the authorities seem equally doubtful.

It would seem from the case of Gouree Lall Singh v. Joodhisteer Hajrah (I. L. R., 1 Cal., 359: 25 W. R., 141), that the learned Judges in that case considered that the notice should be published by the zamindar; whereas other cases seem to show that service upon the patnidar or his amla personally at the cutcheri is sufficient—(See Mungazee Chaprassee v. Shibo Sunduree (21 W. R. 369).

We entertain considerable doubt as to both these points, and as the authorities upon the subject are by no means uniform, and it is desirable that some definite rule upon the subject should be [933] laid down, we think it right to refer the question to a Full Bench.

Whether the service of the notice under the above circumstances was sufficient in point of law to satisfy the requirements of the Regulation ?

The Advocate-General (Mr. Paul) with him Baboo Bosunt Coomar Bose, Baboo Umbica Churn Banerjee, and Baboo Bama Churn Banerjee for the Appellants. Section 8 of the Regulation refers to publication ; the reason for the section is, and it was intended to provide, that notice of the sale should be given to the patnidar and durpatnidar. All the regulation intended was to lay down some rule to provide against fraud ; the meaning of the word " cutcheri " in the section is the nearest large cutcheri at which the business of the landlord is ordinarily carried on. The Legislature never intended that the notice should be posted in a cutcheri on the land of the defaulter, for to mean this, the words " at the " must be struck out. In Hunooman Doss v. Bipro Churn Roy (20 W. R., 132), it was held that it was more in compliance with the section to post the notice at a place where the gomastha carried on his business than at the cutcheri which was not in use. In Mungazee Chaprassee v. Shibo Sunduree (21 W. R., 369), it was held that so long as the cutcheri, at which notice was served on the defaulter, was an adjacent one, at which all the business of the defaulting patindar was carried on, that was sufficient. In the present case the tenants never paid their rents till a notice was served on them, and it was in this very cutcheri where such notice was always served on them, and this had been done for the last twenty years. Is the zamindar now entitled to turn round and say, " this is not the cutcheri in which a notice to avoid my patni ought to have been served ? " The words in the Regulation do not necessarily mean the patni land of the defaulter ; there is nothing to indicate that it was the patni land alone. In Lootfonissa v. Kowar Ram Chunder (S. D. A., 1849, p. 371), it was held that a posting at any cutcheri of the defaulter was sufficient.

[934] The Court did not call on Mr. Evans, who appeared with Baboo Troylokho Nath Mitter, Baboo Guru Das Banerjee, and Baboo Gogesh Chunder Dey for the Respondents.

The following was the Opinion of the Full Bench :--

We are of opinion that in this case the notice was insufficient.

If there is a cutcheri upon the land of the defaulting patnidar, (by which expression we mean the land of the taluk in question), we think that the notice must be published at that cutcheri.

If there is no such cutcheri, the notice must be published at the principal town or village within the taluk.

We think also that the mere delivery of the notice to the patnidar, or one of his amlas, is not sufficient ; but that it must be published in the manner required by the section. The necessity for accurately conforming to both provisions of the Regulation is laid down authoritatively by the Judicial Committee in the case of the Maharajah of Burdwan v. Tara Soondery Debia (L. R., 10 I. A., 19 : s.c., ante, p. 619).

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 140† — Act IX of 1871, Sch. II, Art. 141 — Suit by reversioner for possession.

Under Article 141 of Schedule II, Act XV of 1877, a reversioner who succeeds to immovable property has twelve years to bring his suit for possession from the time when his estate falls into possession.

THIS was a reference to a Full Bench by CUNNINGHAM and MACLEAN, JJ. The referring Judgments were as follows :—

Maclean, J.—The plaintiffs are the grandsons (daughter's sons) of Radha Madhub Pal Chowdhry, by his daughter Shantomoni who died in 1284 (1877) : the defendant is his grandson by his daughter Anundmoyi, who died in 1270 (1863). The property in [935] suit is the residue of Radha Madhub's estate, exclusive of what has been alienated. Plaintiffs claim their share as having descended to them on their mother's death.

The defence is that by adverse possession of his father and himself since 1270 (1863) the defendant has acquired a good title.

The first Court decided that the plaintiff's mother alienated her share, and so effected a partition, and that therefore she did not hold any title after her sister's death. The Subordinate Judge did not agree with this part of the Munsif's decision, but both Courts find as a fact that plaintiff's mother was out of possession from 1270 (1863); and applying the rule that adverse possession which would have extinguished her right also extinguished the reversioner's right, they have dismissed the plaintiffs' suit.

The question, therefore, is whether the rule which was laid down under Act XIV of 1859 is good law under the Limitation Acts of 1871 and 1877.

In Saroda Soonlury Dossee v. Doyamoyee Dossee (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 938), the rule is re-affirmed in clear terms. That was a case governed by Act IX of 1871. I am not, however, prepared to adopt the qualification there put upon the words "entitled to possession." These words seem to me sufficiently clear and I am not disposed to say that they only mean entitled to possession if the last female also was entitled to possession at the time of her death.

* Full Bench Reference, No. 82 of 1882, against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Dacca, dated 26th November 1881, affirming the decree of the Second Munsif of Munshigunj, dated 25th April 1881.

In Pursut Koer v. Palut Roy (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 442), the last female owner had been out of possession for 36 years before her death, and while it was held that the case (although time had run out under Act XIV of 1859) was really a case of improper alienation rather than of adverse possession, it was also decided that the suit was certainly not barred under Act XV of 1877, Art. 141, unless it had been barred under some former Act. In the case before us time had not run out under Act XIV of 1859; and as the Acts of 1871 and 1877 are identical in this respect, the only question was whether the suit has been brought within 12 years of Shantomoni's death. This is not disputed.

I have some doubts about the correctness of the decision in Saroda Soon-dary Dossee v. Doyamoyee Dossee (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 938). I was a party to the decision in Pursut Koer v. Palut Roy (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 442) and also to a recent [936] decision, dated 14th March 1883, in appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1306 of 1881, in which, however, time had not run out against the late female owner.

In Chunder Nath Das v. Asaram Das (1 Shome, 165) it was laid down that limitation ran under Art. 141 from the date of the plaintiffs' mother's death. This case is in support of the view I have taken. I think the question should be authoritatively settled by a Full Bench.

Cunningham, J.—The question raised in this appeal is whether under Art. 141 of the Limitation Act of 1877, the person entitled to the possession of property on the death of a Hindu or Mahomedan female can sue within 12 years of the death of the female, notwithstanding that the female's right of action was barred by 12 years' adverse possession.

As there appears to be some conflict of decision as to this point, and also as to whether time, which has begun to run against the female continues to run against the remainderman, or whether a new period of limitation arises on the death of the female, I concur in referring both questions to the Full Bench.

Babu Kalichurn Bannerjee, for the Appellants. In this case the widow's right is barred by 12 years adverse possession, so the question before the court is whether the reversioner is also barred. Limitation runs not from the date of actual dispossession, but from the date when the estate falls into the reversioner's possession, i.e., from the date of the death of the widow. Chunder Nath Das v. Asaram Das (1 Shome, 165); see also Pursut Koer v. Palut Roy (I. L. R., 8 Cal. 442).

In an unreported case, Special Appeal 1306 of 1881, Dwarkanath Gupta v. Komulmoney Dossee, decided by CUNNINGHAM and MACLEAN, JJ., on the 14th March 1883, it was held that the meaning of Art. 141 is, that, although limitation has begun to run against a widow, yet a fresh period of limitation begins for the reversioner on her death. [GARTH, C.J.—The reversioner does not claim through the widow, but through the husband, so if limitation had run against the widow, he would not be bound by it.] As regards the case of Nobin Chunder Chuckerbutty [937] v. Guru Pershad Doss (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 1008; s.c. 9 W. R., 505) it was decided on the limitation Act of 1859, and it is very probable that the Legislature intentionally modified the effect of that case in passing the later Limitation Acts.

The following Opinions were delivered by the Full Bench :—

Garth, C. J. (MITTER, J., McDONELL, J., and TOTTENHAM, J., concurring).

We think that the rule which was laid down under the Limitation Act of 1859 is no longer the law under the Acts of 1871 and 1877.

A reversioner who succeeds to immovable property has now twelve years to bring his suit from the time when his estate falls into possession. (See Art. 141* of the Act of 1871, and Art. 140 of the Act of 1877.) Under the Act of 1859 the language was very different. The suit under that Act must have been brought within twelve years from the time when the cause of action arose; and as it was considered by the Full Bench of this Court that the cause of action arose at the time when the owner of the inheritance was first dispossessed, they held that a twelve years dispossession, which barred the owner of the inheritance for the time being (although a female), barred also the reversioner. See Nobin Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Guru Pershad Doss (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 1008; s.c. 9 W. R., 505).

The provision in the present Act, as well as that in the Act of 1871, as regards remaindermen and reversioners, assimilates the law in this country to the law of England. (See 3 and 4 Will. IV, Ch. 27, s. 4). As the Subordinate Judge has decided in the plaintiffs' favour upon the merits, we think that they are entitled to a declaration of their rights, and to possession of the shares in question. They should also have their costs in all the Courts.

Prinsep, J.—No doubt the terms of the Limitation Acts of 1871 and 1877 are materially altered in respect of the point now before us, from the Act of 1859, on which the judgment of the [938] Full Bench in the case of Nobin Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Guru Pershad Doss (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 1008; s.c., 9 W. R., 505) proceeded; and although I do not wish to differ from the opinion of my learned colleagues, I have some hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the Legislature in 1871 deliberately altered the law thus laid down in 1868. I further observe that this point has never, that I can find, been before any Division Bench of the Court, except in the case of Saroda Soondury Dossee v. Dayamoyee Dossee (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 938), when the rule laid down in the Full Bench case abovementioned was followed.

[LIMITATION—REVERSIONARY HEIRS—SUIT FOR POSSESSION—

The ruling in this case has been accepted by all the High Courts and Chief Courts. At one time it was thought that the Privy Council decision in 22 Cal. 445 virtually overruled this case. See (1897) 20 All. 42 (46). But this view is not now maintained :—(1901) 23 All., 448 (454); (1903) 25 All., 435 (440); (1898) 26 Cal., 285 (295). In 23 All., 448, the said Privy Council case was explained as only laying down that the reversioner, during the female heir's lifetime, had no right to possession though such female heir's right had been extinguished by adverse possession against her; and that it did not decide the case

Evidence taken on Commission—Commissioner—Documentary evidence, Objection to admissibility of—Evidence taken by Commissioner beyond jurisdiction

—Notice to produce original document—Refusal to produce—

Evidence Act (1 of 1872), s. 63, sub-section 3, 65^a, 66.

If, when evidence is taken before Commissioners, a document is tendered and objected to on any ground, the opposite party is not precluded from objecting to the document at the trial

* [Sec. 65:—Secondary evidence may be given of the existence, condition, or contents of a document in the following cases:—

Cases in which secondary evidence relating to documents may be given.

(a) When the original is shown or appears to be in the possession or power of the person against whom the document is sought to be proved, or of any person out of reach of, or not subject to, the process of the Court, or of any person legally bound to produce it, and when, after the notice mentioned in section sixty-six, such person does not produce it;

(b) when the existence, condition, or contents, of the original have been proved to be admitted in writing by the person against whom it is proved, or by his representative in interest;

(c) when the original has been destroyed or lost, or when the party offering evidence of its contents cannot, for any other reason not arising from his own default or neglect, produce it in reasonable time;

(d) when the original is of such a nature as not to be easily moveable;

(e) when the original is a public document within the meaning of section seventy-four;

(f) when the original is a document of which a certified copy is permitted by this Act, or by any other law in force in British India, to be given in evidence;

(g) when the originals consist of numerous accounts or other documents which cannot conveniently be examined in Court, and the fact to be proved is the general result of the whole collection. In cases (a), (c), and (d), any secondary evidence of the contents of the document is admissible. In case (b) the written admission is admissible. In case (e) or (f) a certified copy of the document, but no other kind of secondary evidence, is admissible. In case (g), evidence may be given as to the general result of the documents by any person who has examined them, and who is skilled in the examination of such documents.]

on any other ground. It is not necessary to state all the objections to the admissibility of a document when it is first tendered, but the party objecting is at liberty to take any fresh objection whenever the party producing the document tenders it in evidence.

Where a commission to take evidence is issued to any place beyond the jurisdiction of the Court issuing the commission, it is not necessary, in order to admit secondary evidence of the contents of a document, that the party tendering it should have given notice to produce the original, nor is it necessary for him to prove a refusal to produce the original.

ON reading the evidence taken under the Commission, it appeared that the Commissioners had received and marked as an exhibit a document which had not been formally proved. An objection had been taken by the defendant's counsel before the Commissioners that the document was "immaterial and irrelevant," but no objection was taken as to want of proof.

Mr. Evans for the Plaintiff now tendered the document.

Mr. Jackson for the Defendant objected. Until a document is finally admitted in evidence, it is open to every objection that may be taken to the admission of a document. If the objection is that some link is wanting, the Court cannot admit it without consent.

Mr. Evans.—The defendants were represented by counsel before the Commissioners, and if their counsel did not choose to object that the document was not formally proved, it is too late to take the objection now. In Robinson v. Davies (L. R., 5 Q. B. D., 26), LUSH, J., said: "The only question is whether, no objection having been taken before the Commissioners to the non-production of the original invoices, it is now competent to the defendants to object that copies only [940] were produced. It seems to me clear, that if the defendants had been represented by counsel, and counsel had made no objection, no objection could be made now. If secondary evidence is received at nisi prius without objection, it cannot be objected to afterwards. The defendants did not choose to be represented by counsel, but each party was represented by a Commissioner, and it was competent to the defendant's commissioner to have objected. If he had done so, and his objection had been overruled, it would have been a different thing. He made no objection, and I am clearly of opinion that it is too late to make one now."

Mr. Jackson, contra.—I don't wish to impugn the proposition laid down in Robinson v. Davies (L. R., 5 Q. B. D., 26), that if secondary evidence is allowed to go in without objection, no objection to it can afterwards be entertained. But if the evidence is illegal it may be struck out at the hearing, though no objection has been made before the Commissioner—Hutchinson v. Bernard (2 Moo. and Rob., 1);—Lumley v. Gye (3 E. and B., 114). The objection is open until the document is properly proved; additional evidence may be adduced hereafter, and the plaintiff may be able to prove the document. But I can object whenever it is tendered if the proof is not sufficient. There is no such thing as a half-admitted document.

Mr. Hill on the same side.—With regard to Robinson v. Davies (L. R. 5 Q. B. D., 26), the real question decided was, that primary evidence ought to be offered, but that secondary evidence can be given by consent, and the decision comes to this: that if secondary evidence is tendered and the other side are silent, that is evidence of consent and they cannot withdraw it; but if a document is not proved silence does not give proof. Either the document is in or not in. It is not necessary to raise all objections at the same time; an objection may be taken on the ground of insufficiency of stamp. That may be cured, but the person objecting would be entitled to object afterwards on the ground of want of proof of execution.

[NORRIS, J.—We are of opinion that the document ought not to be admitted. When counsel objects to a document being admitted he is not bound to state all his objections. If at a subsequent stage the counsel tendering the document thinks he has got over the first objection, the opposing counsel have the right to make any further objections to the admissibility of the document that they may think proper. It is open to the plaintiff to prove the document hereafter.]

A witness was called before the Commissioners to prove that a certain portion of the catch shipped by the plaintiffs in the ship Gertrude had been appropriated to a particular Company in America. The following questions and answers were recorded :—

“Question.—Do you know what was done with the shipment per Gertrude so far as that appropriation that you speak of is concerned, that is, to whom it was appropriated ?

“Answer.—To the Boston Dye Wood and Chemical Company. It was done by letter : the paper I now produce is a copy of the original letter, and I know it to be a copy.”

The defendant's counsel objected on the ground that it was immaterial and irrelevant.

Mr. Evans now tendered the copy.

Mr. Jackson objected on the ground that the absence of the original document had not been accounted for ; that notice to produce it had not been given ; and that a refusal to produce it had not been proved.

Mr. Evans.—Section 65 of the Evidence Act provides that “secondary evidence may be given of the existence, condition or contents of a document

“(a) When the original is shown or appears to be in the possession or power of the person against whom the document is sought to be proved, or of any person out of reach of, or not subject to, the process of the Court, or of any person legally bound to produce it, and when after the notice mentioned in s. 66 such person does not produce it.” And s. 66 provides that “secondary evidence of the contents of the documents referred to in s. 65, clause (a) shall not be given unless the party proposing to give such secondary evidence has previously given to the party in whose possession or power the document is, or to his attorney or pleader, such notice to produce it as is prescribed by law, and if no notice is prescribed by law, then such notice as the Court considers reasonable under the [942] circumstances of the case. Provided that such notice shall not be required in order to render secondary evidence admissible in any of the following cases, or in any other case in which the Court thinks fit to dispense with it.” And clause (b) of the section provides that the notice may be dispensed with, “when the person in possession of the document is out of reach of, or not subject to, the process of the Court.”

The reason of the rule is, that it is useless to serve notice on a person beyond the jurisdiction of the Court when there would be no means of enforcing the production of the original.

It is a relaxation of the English rule. We had no power to compel the attendance of witnesses before the Commissioners, and no means of issuing notices to any person to attend through any Court. I have only to show that there was an original written, and that this is a copy of it in order to use it as secondary evidence. I am entitled to do so because the original is in the possession or power of some person beyond the jurisdiction of the Court. No objection was taken before the Commissioners that the document spoken to by the witness was only a copy. If that objection had been taken we might have been able to produce the original. In any case the Court has the power under the section to dispense with a notice.

Mr. Jackson, contra.—The document was objected to when originally tendered. On the Evidence Act it is clear that this copy is not admissible. Is the Court to assume that it was intended to alter the English law? The Evidence Act merely condenses Taylor on Evidence with some alterations which are manifest. There is no code in England; the law of evidence is Judge-made law and can be modified from time to time.

The first five exceptions in s. 66 * are clearly in accordance with English law. As to the sixth it can be interpreted to be also in accordance with the English law. In England it would be necessary to prove that notice had been given, and that the person to whom it was given refused to comply with it. The reason is that it is necessary to get the best evidence if possible, and to satisfy the Court that an endeavour has been made to get it—Taylor on Evidence, 7th Edition, p. 409. There is no question, but that according to English law, notice and a refusal to comply with it [943] would have to be proved. Clause (b) of s. 66 provides that notice is not required "when the person in possession of the document is out of reach of or not subject to the process of the Court." Section 65 provides for the admission of secondary evidence "when, after the notice mentioned in s. 66, such person does not produce" the original document. That shows that there must be proof of refusal to produce. The mere fact that the document is not produced is not sufficient to allow the admission of secondary evidence. The words must be read, "if such person after such notice does not produce." If that is so the law is in entire accordance with the English law. There must be evidence explaining the non-production of the original, otherwise the original might be in Court and secondary evidence be given of its contents. Upon what principle can it be said that, because a person is out of the jurisdiction, he is not to be asked to produce an original document? In England there are no degrees of secondary evidence; here there are—see s. 63. This copy could only come under clause (3) of s. 63. There is no evidence to show that it was made from or compared with the original. Merely saying that it is a copy is not a sufficient compliance with the Act.

Mr. Phillips on the same side.—Section 63 provides that where the person is out of the jurisdiction, secondary evidence may be given after the notice

* [Sec. 66 :—Secondary evidence of the contents of the documents referred to in section sixty-five, clause (a), shall not be given unless the party proposing to give such secondary evidence has previously given to the party in whose possession or power the document is, such notice to produce it as is prescribed by law; and if no notice is prescribed by law, then such notice as the Court considers reasonable under the circumstances of the case:

Provided that such notice shall not be required in order to render secondary evidence admissible in any of the following cases, or in any other case in which the Court thinks fit to dispense with it :—

- (1) When the document to be proved is itself a notice;
- (2) When from the nature of the case, the adverse party must know that he will be required to produce it;
- (3) When it appears or is proved that the adverse party has obtained possession of the original by fraud or force;
- (4) When the adverse party or his agent has the original in Court;
- (5) When the adverse party or his agent has admitted the loss of the document;
- (6) When the person in possession of the document is out of reach of, or not subject to the process of the Court.]

required by s. 66 has been given. The last paragraph of (a) applies to everything which has gone before. If the Legislature meant to exempt such documents from the rules as to notice it would not have included them in a provision which refers to all. "Such notice" is the notice prescribed by law, and if no notice is prescribed by law, then such notice as the Court considers reasonable. It is not said that no notice need be given. There must be at least such notice as the Court considers reasonable. All notice is not dispensed with. It is not reasonable that no attempt should be made to produce the original.

Norris, J.—We are of opinion that the document is admissible. Mr. Jackson says that it is not proved to be a copy within the meaning of s. 63 of the Evidence Act, and that if it is a copy at all it comes under sub-section 3. The witness says: "The copy now produced is a copy of the original, and I know it to be so." [944] Mr. Jackson says that that is not sufficient to show that the document is a copy made from or compared with the original. I think the fair interpretation is that the witness knew it to be a copy made from the original from personal knowledge. Then was there an original document? The evidence shows that a letter was sent to the Boston Dye Wood Company, and that certain action was taken upon it.

Then, is this copy admissible in evidence? Section 65 says: "Secondary evidence may be given of the existence, condition or contents of a document in the following cases:—

"(a) When the original is shown or appears to be in the possession or power of the person against whom the document is sought to be proved, or of any person out of reach of, or not subject to, the process of the Court, or of any person legally bound to produce it, and when after the notice mentioned in s. 66 such person does not produce it." There is therefore a clear legislative enactment that notice, or a reasonable notice, must be given, but that is qualified by s. 66, clause (b) which dispenses with notice "when the person in possession of the document is out of reach of, or not subject to, the process of the Court."

Mr. Jackson argued that there must be evidence of a refusal to produce the original document. I do not see that that is required by the Act at all, and I do not think that it is requisite.

Mr. Phillips wishes us to read "such notice" as applying to statutory notice first and then to reasonable notice. That I think would be governed by or subject to sub-section 6 of s. 66. The Boston Dye Works are persons out of the jurisdiction of the Court, and we think therefore that notice was not requisite and that the copy is admissible.

Nihal-ud-din Khan.....Plaintiff.

[On appeal from the Court of the Commissioner of the Faizabad Division of Oudh.]

Res-judicata—Suit for maintenance—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. 2, Art. 132.

An allowance for the maintenance of a younger member of a family, was charged upon the inheritance to which the eldest male member alone succeeded. In a suit for such an allowance brought by a younger brother against the elder, who had succeeded their deceased father in the possession of the estate, held that an order made dismissing a claim for maintenance proffered by such younger brother against their father in his life-time founded on an ekrarnama, did not afford a defence under s. 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Held, also that the brothers having made an agreement, fixing the allowance for maintenance at a certain sum, the younger brother agreeing to receive a less sum for a defined period, he could only obtain a decree for the allowance so reduced.

An objection taken on this appeal, that this suit should have been brought on that agreement, held taken too late ; the defendant having been made aware of the agreement at the hearing, and not having objected on this ground in the first Appellate Court. A suit for arrears of such maintenance, within twelve years, is within time under Act XV of 1877.

APPEAL from a decree (30th January 1879) of the Commissioner of the Faizabad division, confirming a decree (1st June 1878) of the Deputy Commissioner of the Lucknow district.

The question raised on this appeal related to a charge for maintenance on the village Kalispur in the Lucknow district, and others in Pertabghar in Oudh, which were granted maafi, in the time of the Nawabi, to one of the ancestors of the late Mahomed Hossein, the father of the parties to this suit, who were brothers by different mothers.

These maafi estates had been charged, at the time of the grant, with the payment of sums for the maintenance of the younger members of the family in the hands of the maafidar.

[946] Mahomed Hossein in 1861 received from the British Government a sanad confirming the rent-free holdings, as they had existed under the Mahomedans ; and, he being in bad health, his mother Fatima Bibi acted as manager of the estates for him.

On the 10th July 1862, a claim for Rs. 1,128 brought by Nihal-ud-din against his father for a monthly allowance due on an ekrarnama purporting to be signed by Fatima Bibi, was dismissed by an Assistant Commissioner in the Lucknow district.

Upon the death of Mahomed Hossein in 1863, Nihal-ud-din disputed his elder brother's right to the inheritance, and in proceedings, taken both before and after the passing of Act I of 1869, unsuccessfully claimed to exclude his brother.

On the 5th March 1878, he brought this suit for a declaration of his right to maintenance, claiming arrears for eleven years and eight months, at Rs. 140 per mensem. At the hearing in the Court of First Instance an agreement, dated 11th December 1869, was produced, whereby Nihal-ud-din, giving up his claim to the estates, accepted an allowance of Rs. 75 per mensem for one year, with Rs. 100 per mensem for the next six years, and after that Rs. 140 per mensem.

The Court held that neither with reference to the Assistant Commissioner's order of 1862, nor on the ground of limitation, was the suit barred; and that there was no doubt that the Government grant contemplated the maintenance of this rent-free holding, as it had existed under the Nawabi, subject to the charge for the benefit of the younger members of the family. The suit was decreed in favour of the plaintiff, and an appeal was dismissed by the Commissioner, who, as the Court exercising the final appellate jurisdiction, gave to the defendant, on his application, a certificate for appeal to Her Majesty in Council under Chapter XLV of the Code of Civil Procedure, Act X of 1877.

On this appeal,—

Mr. J. H. W. Arathoon appeared for the Appellant.

Mr. C. W. Arathoon for the Respondent.

For the appellant it was argued that this claim, regarded as [947] of doubtful validity in regard to the altered circumstances of the maafi estate after 1858, and again after 1869, had been concluded by the proceedings in 1862. Again, the production of the agreement of 1869 showed that the alleged charge on the maafi estates was not the ground on which the respondent relied. If maintainable at all, this claim could only be based on that agreement.

For the respondent it was argued that the judgments of the lower Courts were correct. Any objection to the suit not having been framed upon the agreement of 1869 should have been taken in the lower Court. But it was not a tenable objection; the undertaking to pay the allowance confirming the right of the plaintiff rested on the original charge on the estate.

Their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by Sir R. Couch.—This is a suit between two brothers, the sons of Mahomed Hossein Khan, who died in November 1863. The plaintiff in the suit, the respondent before their Lordships, was the second son of Mahomed Hossein Khan, and the defendant, the appellant, was the elder son. It appears that upon the death of their father there was considerable litigation between the brothers with regard to the right to the estate of the father. That litigation began in 1863, and the result of it was that the defendant, the appellant, was declared to be entitled to the estate. After that the respondent brought a suit against his brother in which he claimed to recover Rs. 19,600 for arrears of maintenance for 11 years, and 8 months, viz., from the 1st July 1866 to the end of February 1878, at Rs. 140 a month, and a declaration of his right to maintenance in perpetuity, and to have it judicially declared that the maintenance was a debt due from the estate of Khalispur, situated in the Lucknow district, as also from Mamni and Motka, being the estates which the defendant had recovered by means of the litigation. He appears to have fixed the 1st July 1866 for the beginning of this claim for maintenance, and claimed arrears from that date, as being the day on which he was himself dispossessed of the estate and the defendant got possession of it. His case was that he was legally entitled to maintenance at the rate of Rs. 140 a month from the estate of his deceased father; and in his plaint he founded his claim [948] upon an order of the Deputy Commissioner of Lucknow in a suit between the father and Mussamut Bibi Fatima, his grandmother and the present defendant, who was the plaintiff in that suit. He also said that he was dispossessed of the property under an order dated 29th June 1865, which was upheld by Her Majesty in Council. The defendant, by his written statement, set up various answers to the claim. The material defences were that the plaintiff was not entitled to any maintenance as the son of Mahomed Hossein; that the claim was barred by limitation, as the plaintiff himself said that he had not received maintenance since September 1863; and that the defendant was not bound by the document which was filed by Bibi Fatima, being a document alluded to in the plaint, nor by any document filed by Mahomed Hossein; and, lastly, in the 11th paragraph of his written statement, he alleged that the claim was barred by the fact of its being res judicata. Issues were settled which raised what are the substantial questions between the parties, and they were: (1) is the suit barred by res judicata; (2) is the suit barred by limitation; and, (3) and (4) which may be taken together, was the plaintiff entitled to the maintenance, and if so at what rate, and from whom? Both the lower Courts have made decrees in favour of the plaintiff, and the defendant has appealed to Her Majesty in Council from the decree of the Commissioner which affirmed the decree of the first Court.

With regard to the first question, whether the suit was barred by res judicata, the document which is relied upon by the defendant appears to be an order made in a suit brought by the plaintiff against Mahomed Hossein the father, in which he claimed to be entitled to a monthly allowance for maintenance founded on some ekrarnama, which would appear to have been executed by the grandmother, who had the management of the property in consequence of Mahomed Hossein being incapable of taking care of his affairs. That is clearly not an order which would be res judicata in the present suit. It was not an adjudication between these parties but between the plaintiff and his father, and it was altogether upon a different sort of claim. There is no ground for saying that the lower Courts were wrong in deciding against the defendant upon that issue.

[949] Another question was raised which perhaps it may be well for their Lordships to notice. It was said that, there being an agreement, which will be presently mentioned, and which was put in as evidence on behalf of the plaintiff, a suit should have been brought upon that and not in the present form. If there had been ground for this objection, it might and should have been taken when the defendant appealed to the Commissioner. It was said that he could not know of the objection when the written statement was filed, because the agreement was produced for the first time at the hearing of the cause when evidence was given, and it had not been filed; but after the hearing, and after the production of the agreement, the defendant knew perfectly well that it was being used against him, and when he made his appeal to the Commissioner he could have taken this objection. If there is any ground for the objection it cannot be taken in the present stage of the proceedings.

The next question, in the order in which the issues were framed, is the law of limitation; but perhaps it will be better first to consider the other, which is the main question in the case, and which arises upon the third and fourth issues, namely, whether the plaintiff is entitled to receive the maintenance.

The lower Courts have come to this conclusion upon that question. As to his being entitled to receive the maintenance, the Officiating Deputy Commissioner says: "Moreover it appears to me that the defendant, as maafidar merely takes that estate in trust, subject to the rent-charges, and that he is bound to pay the stipends with which the estate is charged. Sanad or act of Government does not absolve him from this charge. As regards plaintiff's right to the allowance claimed, there is, in my opinion, no doubt; the documentary evidence referred to and filed fully establishes this fact, that the cadets of the family were assigned certain specified allowances payable to them from the estate by the eldest male member managing the estate." The Commissioner says, "Regarding the payment of the allowance, I consider the evidence on the file of the lower Court amply sufficient. It clearly establishes that the cadets of the family were assigned certain allowances payable to them from the estate by the eldest uncle in possession." There is this finding of both the [930] Courts to the effect that the allowance for maintenance was charged upon the estate; and there is evidence in the case upon which they might well come to that conclusion.

It appears that in December 1869 the parties came to an agreement. The defendant's part of agreement states "that Mahomed Nihal-ud-din Khan"—that is the plaintiff—"has waived his claim to succession of the estate, and, having filed a registered deed of compromise (razinama) in Court, has caused the suit to be withdrawn. That for his personal expenses I have fixed an allowance of Rs. 75 per mensem for a term of one year, and then for the next six years Rs. 100 a month; and as at present I am very much in debt, owing to the law expenses incurred, so much so that many of my maafi (revenue-free) villages are mortgaged and hypothecated and the estate yields very little profits; I cannot afford at present to pay the old allowance of Rs. 140 per mensem to Mahomed Nihal-ud-din Khan. But after the expiration of the aforesaid term of seven years I shall continue to disburse the old pay of Rs. 140 a month in perpetuity. If at any time I may offer any objection or hesitate in paying up each of the three descriptions of monthly allowances, Mahomed Nihal-ud-din Khan will be at liberty to realise the same by a suit in Court. If for my own necessity I may mortgage or hypothecate the maafi villages, so that the property left may be insufficient to meet the monthly allowance fixed, I will in that case pay the said allowance out of the estate Khalispur Amoliha." And there is a corresponding agreement, of the same date, by the plaintiff, which recognises this agreement. This document was put in by the plaintiff, and formed a very important part of the evidence in support of his case. Besides that, there was evidence of some previous proceedings with reference to this estate and the allowances for maintenance, in which there was a report of the extra Assistant Commissioner of Lucknow made under the order of the Deputy Commissioner, stating that, in the opinion of the Extra Assistant Commissioner, it was proved that the parties mentioned received the allowances shown opposite to their names. There is mentioned the name of "Nihal-ud-din Khan, Rs. 140," which would seem to be the allowance that was at one time paid. Their Lordships think that the lower Courts, [951] with this evidence before them, were quite justified in finding that the plaintiff was entitled to an allowance for his maintenance as a charge upon the property which had come from the father, Mahomed Hossein Khan. If that is the case, the plea of the law of limitation is answered, because it is shown that the maintenance was a charge upon the property, and 12 years is the term which is applicable to the suit. The plaintiff only seeks to recover arrears from the 1st of July 1866, which is within the 12 years. Therefore, the issue raised as to the law of limitation was properly found against the defendant.

But there remains this question: Although it would appear that at one time Rs. 140 had been paid monthly for the maintenance, when the parties came to the agreement which has been read in consequence apparently of the state of the property, the plaintiff was willing to receive less than the Rs. 140 for a part of the time. It was then arranged that Rs. 75 should be paid from the date of that agreement for the year 1870; that Rs. 100 should be paid up to the 14th December 1876, and after that time that the Rs. 140 should be paid. Now the plaintiff's case was mainly supported by this agreement, Exhibit A: it was put forward at the outset of the case as his evidence by the pleader who appeared for him; and it does seem right that he ought not to be allowed to recover more than he agreed by that document to receive. If he had had to sue upon the agreement he could only have recovered that. He has sued in a different way; but their Lordships are of opinion that this is all that he ought to recover in the present suit.

The consequence will be that their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty that the decree which has been made in the plaintiff's favour by the lower Courts should be altered by giving to the plaintiff the arrears, calculated in the manner provided for in the agreement, with interest upon those arrears from the date of the decree at the same rate as has been given by the lower Courts upon the sum which they awarded. The decrees of the lower Courts as to the costs will stand, and with regard to the costs of this appeal, the respondent has really substantially succeeded in it. The objections of law which were taken by the appellant, [952] and without which he would have had no right of appeal, have entirely failed, and their Lordships therefore think that the appellant ought to pay the costs of the appeal.

Decree modified.

[On appeal from the High Court at Fort William in Bengal.]

Hindu Law--Will, Construction of--Gift ineffectual so far as it departs from the law of inheritance--Gift over of accrued share.

A gift by will, attempting to exclude the legal course of inheritance, is only effectual, in favour of such person as can take, to the extent to which the will is consistent with the Hindu law. And it is a distinct departure from that law to restrict the order of succession to males excluding females.

A testator gave by his will to three sons of his brother certain estates "for payment of the expenses of their pious acts." He also directed as follows :—"The said three nephews shall hold possession of the above in equal shares, and shall pay the Government revenue of the same into the Collectorate. They shall have no right to alienate the same by gift or sale, but they, their sons, grandsons, and their descendants in the male line shall enjoy the same, and shall perform acts of piety as they respectively shall think fit for the spiritual welfare of our ancestors. If any die without leaving a male child, which God forbid, then his share shall devolve on the surviving nephews, and their male descendants, and not on their other heirs."

In a suit between the survivor of the three nephews and the testator's heir, held, that the attempt to alter the legal course of inheritance failed, and that the estate taken under the above clause was only for life.

The gift over of a life estate was competent; it being to persons alive, and capable of taking on the death of the testator, and to take effect on the death of a person or persons then alive.

On the death of one brother his share went to the two other brothers, and on the death of one of the latter his augmented share, made up of his original and accrued share, went to the survivor.

[933] APPEAL and cross appeal from a decree of the High Court (9th September 1880) (see Shoshi Shikhuressur Roy v. Tarokessur Roy, I. L. R., 6 Cal., 421), modifying a decree of the first Subordinate Judge of the Rajshahye district (2nd May 1878).

Chandra Shikhuressur Roy and Moheswar Roy were brothers, of whom the former dying in 1865 left a son Kumar Shikhuressur Roy, the respondent and cross appellant. He had made a will containing a bequest in favour of Moheswar's three sons, of whom the survivor, Tarokessur Roy, was the appellant and cross respondent.

The material clause of the will, and the facts relevant to this report, appear on their Lordship's judgment.

In the Original and Appellate Courts it was found that the will was genuine, and the only question now raised was as to its legal effect. The Subordinate Judge of the Rajshahye district held that the appellant, Tarokessur Roy, was entitled to an absolute interest in the estates given by the will; but the High Court (GARTH, C.J., and MITTER, J.), held that the gift, in so far as it restricted the inheritance to male descendants, was inoperative; that on the authority of the Tagore case (Jotendromohun Tagore v. Ganendromohun Tagore, 4 B. L. R., O. C., 103; 9 B. L. R., 377; S. C. L. R., Sup. Vol. 47), the three brothers were entitled to the estate in equal shares for their respective lives; and that the particular estate of inheritance which the testator had attempted to create was void. But that the gift over to the surviving brothers was valid according to the Hindu law, as declared in the above cited case, and also in Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Denobundhoo Mullick (9 Moore's I. A., 123). On the remaining question, whether the share of the brother who died first went over, with the share of him who died next, to the surviving brother, they held that it was the intention of the testator that the whole share, original and accrued, should pass. The judgment is reported in I. L. R., 6 Cal., 424.

Against this decision Tarokessur appealed on the ground that he was entitled to the absolute interest. The respondent, Shikhuressur Roy, contesting his right to more than a life estate, filed a cross appeal to the effect that the will, properly construed, [934] gave no more than a life estate on the one-third share as it originally stood, without the accrued shares.

Mr. R. V. Doyne and Mr. C. W. Arathoon appeared for Tarokessur Roy.

Mr. J. D. Mayne and Mr. J. T. Woodroffe for Soshi Shikhuressur Roy.

For the appellant it was argued that the clause in the will now in question gave, when only due effect was given to the ineffectual attempt to restrict the right to inherit to males, an absolute interest, as well in the survivor's one-third part as in the accrued shares to which he had succeeded, under the gift over, on the deaths of his brothers, respectively.

The testator having attempted to effect what was contrary to the Hindu law, his will was to that extent inoperative. But it did not follow that he was intestate as to the estate of inheritance, of which he had attempted the disposal. For the latter proposition the Tagore case (9 B. L. R., 377), in which, in the most express terms, the estate given to the first taker was a life estate only, was hardly to be considered an authority.

That case did not precisely apply to what had arisen here, the testator in this instance having attempted to create an estate of inheritance in the first taker. The conditions which he had attempted to impose could not indeed be held valid; but the intention of the testator, to the extent to which it was consistent with the Hindu law, should receive effect. This it would hardly receive if the absolute interest were cut down to a life estate. It would be sufficient to strike out the words of the will attempting to control the course of descent; and the gift of the absolute interest could be maintained on the principles indicated in Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Denobundhoo Mullick (9 Moore's I. A., 123). In connection with this argument reference was made to Bhoobun Mohini Debia v. Hurrish Chunder Chowdhry (L. R., 5 I. A., 138; s.c., I. L. R., 4 Cal., 23); Ranlal Mookerjee v. The Secretary of State for India (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 304); Soudamoney Dossee v. Jogesh Chunder Dutt (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 262); [955] Srimati Bramamayi Dossee v. Jageschandra Dutt (8 B. L. R., 400); Kherodemoney Dossee v. Doorgamoney Dossee (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 455); the Hindu Wills' Act (XXI of 1870); and the Indian Succession Act, 1865.

For the respondent and cross appellant, it was submitted that the surviving nephew was entitled only to a life estate, and that he took his one-third without the addition of the shares of his deceased brothers. The will was valid only to the extent of giving a life estate to the three nephews—a proposition clearly resting on the principle of the Tagore case, which was applicable here. The testator had attempted to make the property descend in three lines, restricted in a manner not permitted by Hindu law. That being the state of things, to give an absolute estate to the first taker, striking out the restriction as to the mode of descent, and to let the gift operate as a gift of the inheritance, would be to make another, and a distinct line, which (however well it might accord with law), would not accord with the testator's intention. The creation of a life estate in such a case as the present agrees with what the testator certainly, at least, intended; but the creation of an unrestricted estate of inheritance would not. Again, as a gift of the inheritance, the disposition would form a gift to a class some of whom were not in existence at the death of the testator; and it was, as regards the inheritance, affected by the invalid restriction. That the gift over was valid would appear doubtful if the case were put (which might have arisen) of two of the nephews surviving the third, and then one of the survivors dying, leaving sons who would stand in his place. Forming a class, and entitled to take as a class if at all, they could not all take, so much of the gift as related to the sons being invalid; and it being the rule that, in gifts to a class, there could not be a choice between two objects thereof, so as to give effect to one part, and not to another—Leake v. Robinson (2 Mer., 363); Pearks v. Moseley (L. R., 5 App. Cas., 714). This doctrine has been recognized in India—see Callynauth Naugh Chowdhry v. Chundernath Naugh Chowdhry (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 378); and Soudaminy Dossee v. Jogesh Chunder Dutt (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 262). [956] Reference was also made to the Tagore case (4 B. L. R., 103, at p. 179), and Kherodemoney Dossee v. Doorgamoney Dossee (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 455). Tried by this test the gift over was of questionable validity.

Mr. Dojne replied.

On a subsequent day (March 17th) their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by Sir R. P. Collier.—The question in these appeals arises upon the construction of a clause in a Hindu will, which is in these terms :—

"My brother's sons, Kumar Jogodesur Roy, Kumar Tarokessur Roy, and Kumar Sibesur Roy, shall receive, for defrayment of the expenses of their pious acts, the following out of the properties left by me, to wit, my one-half share in pergunnahs Chowgaon and Khord Chowgaon, recorded as No. 278 in the Collectorate of Zillah Rajshahye, in Dehi Dalil, and others, appertaining to tuppa Byas, and recorded as No. 456, and in mouzah Dehi Gobindpore, in pergunnah Santosh, recorded as No. 96 in the touzi or rent-roll of the Collectorate of Zillah Dinajpore. The said three nephews shall hold possession of the same in equal shares, and shall pay the Government revenue of the same into the Collectorate. They shall have no right to alienate the same by gift or sale; but they, their sons, grandsons, and other descendants in the male line, shall enjoy the same, and shall perform acts of piety as they respectively shall see fit for the spiritual welfare of our ancestors. If any of them die without leaving a male child (which God forbid), then his share shall devolve on the surviving nephews and their male descendants, and not on their other heirs."

The facts necessary to be stated are, that the three nephews of the testator were living at his death, that two of them died before the institution of the present suit, one unmarried, the other leaving a widow but no issue; that the suit was instituted by Kumar Tarokessur Roy, the survivor, against the infant son of the testator, represented by Hurgobind Bose, appointed manager of the estate by the Court of Wards, to obtain a declaration of title to and possession of half of pergunnahs Chowgaon and Khord Chowgaon. No question rises as to Gobindpore in this suit.

[937] The plaintiff based his claim on the clause of the will above set out, contending that by its terms an absolute estate was given in undivided shares to the three nephews; that upon the death of his brothers their shares devolved on him, and he was thus entitled to the whole.

The defendant denied the execution and validity of the will, both of which issues have been disposed of by concurrent Judgments of the Courts against him. He further contended that upon the true construction of the will, which is narrowed to that of the clause in question the plaintiff was entitled only to a life estate in one-third of the property devised.

The Court of First Instance gave the plaintiff a decree for his whole claim.

This decree was altered by the High Court which gave him a life interest only in the whole of the property.

From the Judgment of the High Court there are cross appeals. The first by the plaintiff, on the ground that he was entitled to an absolute estate in the whole. The second by the defendant, on the ground that the plaintiff was entitled to a life estate in one-third only. It will be convenient to deal firstly with the first appeal.

The grounds of the judgment of the High Court that the plaintiff was entitled to a life estate only may be thus shortly stated.

They held, on the authority of Jottendromohan Tagore v. Ganendromohan Tagore (L. R. Sup. Vol. Ap., 47), commonly called "the Tagore case," that the testator, having attempted to create an estate of inheritance unknown to and opposed to Hindu law, that estate of inheritance was void, and that the will operated only to confer on the plaintiff an estate for life.

The Tagore case is so well known, and has been so often referred to by this Board, that it is unnecessary to cite it at length, and it is enough for the present purpose to refer to the following passage:—

"If the gift were to a man and his heirs to be selected from a line other than that specified by law, expressly excluding the legal [938] course of inheritance, as, for instance, if an estate were granted to a man and his eldest nephew and the eldest nephew of such eldest nephew, and so forth forever, to take as his heirs, to the exclusion of all other heirs and without any of the persons so taking having the power to dispose of the estate during his lifetime, here, inasmuch as an inheritance so described is not legal, such a gift cannot take effect, except in favour of such persons as could take under a gift to the extent to which the gift is consistent with the law. The first taker would, in this case, take for his lifetime, because the giver had at least that intention. He could not take more, because the language is inconsistent with his having any different inheritance from that which the gift attempts to confer, and that estate of inheritance which it confers is void."

It is true that the departure from Hindu law in the present case is not as great as in the case supposed in this passage, or as in the Tagore case, where the attempt was to establish what would be called an estate in tail-male according to English law. But the attempt to confine the succession to males, to the entire exclusion of females, is, though not so great, yet a distinct departure from Hindu law, "excluding," in the terms of the judgment quoted, "the legal course of inheritance."

It has been contended on the part of the appellant, that the present case is distinguishable from the Tagore case, on the ground that, in that case, the first estate given was in terms an estate for life; that in the present case, if the words relating to succession, viz., "that their sons, grandsons and other descendants in the male line shall enjoy the same, and shall perform acts of piety as they respectively shall think fit, for the spiritual welfare of our ancestors," were struck out, the gift would be of an estate of inheritance; and that the intention of the testator to confer an estate of inheritance may be effectuated by striking out so much of the clause above quoted as excludes females from the succession.

Their Lordships are unable to accede to this view.

Considering that the gift to the nephews is expressed as to be received for the defrayment of their pious acts, and that alienation is forbidden, they do not construe the gift, independently of the words prescribing the course of succession, as conferring an absolute estate. They are further of opinion that to alter the [959] words prescribing the course of succession, so as to admit females, would be in effect to make a new will for the testator, and one which, so far from carrying his intentions into effect, would be in direct opposition to his intention, and indeed to his main object expressed in other parts of his will, as well as in this clause, viz., to exclude females.

The case of Bhoobun Mohini Debia v. Hurrish Chunder Chowdhry (L. R., 5 A., 138; I. L. R., 4 Cal., 23) has been cited on behalf of the appellant, in which the following words of a grant,—“You are my sister; I accordingly grant you a taluk for your support, . . . being in possession of the lands, and paying rent, &c., to the tahut jamma, do you and the generations born of your womb successively (Santan sreni krame) enjoy the same, no other heir of yours shall have right or interest,”—were construed as conferring an absolute estate, defeasible on the failure of issue living at the death of the donee. In that case the words of gift (of which the original in the native language are given) were held to have no technical meaning, signifying much the same as “children and grandchildren,” and indicating an estate of inheritance, while the only words which created a difficulty, “no other heir of yours shall have right or interest” were held to be satisfied, by giving them the effect of making the absolute estate defeasible in the event of the failure of issue living at the time of the death of the donee, in which event the estate was to revert to the donor and his heirs. This case has no bearing on the present.

For these reasons they are of opinion that the first appeal should be dismissed.

The second appeal arises on the construction of the concluding paragraph of the clause:—

“If any of them die without leaving a male child (which God forbid), then his share shall devolve on the surviving nephews and their male descendants, and not on their other heirs.”

Their Lordships construe this clause thus, in accordance with the construction put upon it by both the Indian Courts: “Any of them” means any of the three nephews, not any of their descendants; on the death of any of three nephews his share shall [960] go to the surviving nephews or nephew, not to the descendants of a dead nephew; but on the estate getting into the hands of the surviving nephew or nephews, it is to descend, as had been before provided, to males only. This construction disposes of an ingenious argument of Mr. Mayne—based on the hypothesis that upon the death of the second nephew his share would go to his surviving brother, and to the “male descendants” of his dead brother—that this would be a gift to a class, some of whom, i.e., the male descendants, could not take, and would therefore, by a well-known rule of law, be altogether invalid.

According to the construction which their Lordships adopt, the gift over was to persons alive and capable of taking on the death of the testator, to take effect on the death of a person or persons also then alive, and was competent, according to the authority of Sreemutty Soorjémonee Dossee v. Denobundhoo Mullick (9 Moore's I. A., 135), as explained in the Lagore case. For the reasons above given it could only confer an estate for life.

One point only remains to be considered, which was indeed not argued before their Lordships, but is suggested in the judgment of the High Court, viz., whether upon the death of the brother dying secondly, his original share only, or the share also of his deceased brother which had accrued to him, went over to the surviving brother. It is undoubtedly a rule of English law that, when a fund is given to a class of persons with a direction that, on the death of any them, their shares are to go over, the original shares only and not the accruing shares, will go over. This rule was stated by Lord Hardwick in Pain v. Benson (3 Atk., 80), and has been followed, not always without expressions of reluctance, by a long series of decisions.

But an intention that the accruing shall go over with the original shares has been inferred where there is what has been called “an aggregate fund” which the testator desires to keep unsevered (when the gift has been to several with benefit of survivorship), (Worlidge v. Churchill, 3 Brown's Ch. Rep., 465. In re Crawhall's Trust, 8 De G., M. & G., 480), when, in addition to the word "share," the word "interest" [961] is used (Douglas v. Andrews, 14 Beavan, 347), or where the words are his "or her share or shares" (Wilmot v. Flewitt, 11 Jur., N. S., 820), so that the application of the doctrine to English wills has sometimes given rise to questions of some nicety. What might have been the effect of the words in question had they been found in an English will, their Lordships think it unnecessary to decide, as they are of opinion that the rule, founded in a great measure on our peculiar doctrine, that the heir-at-law is not to be disinherited, but by express words or necessary implication, has no application to the wills of Hindus. It may be observed that such a course of devolution is the ordinary course for Hindu property as between brothers inheriting from brothers, and would present itself most readily to the mind of a Hindu testator; so that, even if the English rule should be applied anywhere beyond the domain of English law, it could hardly be applied to Hindu wills without defeating the intention. Their Lordships feel constrained by no rule of law to read the words in any other than their natural sense, viz., that, on the death of the first brother, his share goes to his two brothers, and that, on the death of one of these, the share which he had at his death, made up of his original and his accrued share, goes to the surviving brother.

For these reasons their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty that the judgment appealed against be affirmed, and that both appeals be dismissed.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

The 15th, 16th and 17th February, and the 15th March, 1883.

PRESENT :

LORD BLACKBURN, SIR B. PEACOCK, SIR R. P. COLLIER, SIR R. COUCH,
AND SIR A. HOBHOUSE.

Mohesh Lal.....Plaintiff

and Mohant Bawan Das.....Defendant.

[On appeal from the High Court at Fort William in Bengal.]

Mortgage, Payment of—Extinction of charge—Intention of parties—Presumption.

Whether a mortgage, paid off, has been kept alive or extinguished depends upon the intention of the parties ; the mere fact that it has been paid off [962] not deciding the question whether or not it has been extinguished. Express declaration of intention will cause either the one result or the other, and in the absence of such expression, the intention may be inferred, either one way or the other.

A lender of money upon a mortgage, which, however, having been made by a person not having authority to charge the greater part of the property included in it, was to that extent invalid, relied upon a charge effected in a prior paid-off mortgage to another mortgagee of the same property. The balance due for the prior mortgage-debt had been paid out of the money advanced on the later, and the prior instrument had come into the possession of the present mortgagee.

Held, that it must be presumed, in the absence of any expression of intention to the contrary, that the borrower, who claimed to be the owner of the property which he attempted to charge, intended that the money should be applied in paying off and extinguishing the prior mortgage, there being no intermediate incumbrance. It being, also, presumable that the lender lent the money upon the security of the later mortgage, he did not become entitled to an additional security, merely, because that which he had taken had thus proved invalid in part. Held, therefore, that the prior mortgage had been extinguished.

APPEAL from a decree of a Divisional Bench of the High Court (22nd August 1879), reversing a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpore (30th June 1877).

The appellant, a mahajan trading by his gomashtas at Bhagalpore, brought the suit, out of which this appeal arose, against two defendants ; one being the respondent Bawan Das, mohant of the asthal, or religious institution of Jankinagar, endowed with lands in zillah Purneah ; the other being one Mangal Das, who had acted for some years as am mukhtar, or general agent, of former mohants of Jankinagar.

The principal questions now raised were : First, whether or not a valid mortgage had been made to the appellant of three villages in Purneah, viz., Kankerghat, Bishenpur Kantahi, and Ganeshampur Patharghat, belonging either to the institution Jankinagar, or to Bawan Das, as the mohant thereof. Secondly, whether a prior undisputed mortgage of the same property to another person on which the balance due had been paid off out of the money advanced by the appellant, and which was in the possession of the latter, could be held available to charge the property in his favour for so much of the money as had been thus appropriated.

[963] The suit was brought in 1876 to recover from Bawan Das and Mangal Das Rs. 33,989-12-6, made up of Rs. 18,421-7-6, due on a mortgage bond executed by Mangal Das on the 12th May 1872, and of Rs. 15,568-5 due on an account stated in 1873 between the plaintiff's firm and Mangal Das, together with interest on those amounts; also to obtain an order for the sale of the above-mentioned villages, together with one-third of another named Puraini Kalan, as having been mortgaged by the instrument of the above date.

The plaintiff obtained a decree in his favour in the Court of First Instance. As Mangal Das did not appeal against that decree, it remained in force against him personally, and bound that part of the property which consisted of the third part of Puraini Kalan; that alone, it being in fact the property of Mangal Das himself, being held (on the appeal of Bawan Das) to be subject to the mortgage of 1872. The three other villages above named were held by the High Court (MITTER and TOTENHAM, JJ.) not to have been mortgaged by Mangal Das, with due authority; and the Court also held that Bawan Das had not been rendered liable as principal.

The following summary of the facts was given in the judgment of the High Court:—

"In the year 1815, the then mohant, Girdhari Das, first opened an account with the plaintiff's kothi. The mohant used to remit money to the plaintiff's bank from time to time; the plaintiff, on the other hand, used to pay the Government revenue of estates standing in the mohant's name in the Collector's rent-roll. Girdhari was succeeded by the mohant Jairam Das, who died in 1858. Before his death, Jairam Das appointed Mangal Das, the defendant, as his am mukhtar and appointed Balgobind as his own successor, associating Mangal Das with him as karpurdaz, with authority over all affairs and law suits, both of sudder and mofussil.

"After Balgobind became mohant, the affairs of the asthal being embarrassed, and a decree having been made against him, a deed of sale, or kobala dated 15th August 1860, purporting to have been executed by him, was registered." This purported to grant the three above-named villages to Mangal Das, in whose name an entry of them was made in the Collector's register in place of that [964] of the mohant of Jankinagar. In the plaintiff's kothi the account, which had been up to that time carried on with Balgobind, were thenceforth, i.e., from September 1861, entered in the books in the name of Mangal Das, who in 1864 purchased Puraini Kalan out of money advanced by the plaintiff, Mangal Das being debited with it by the kothi.

"In the execution of the decree against Balgobind certain villages were sold which Mangal Das purchased for Rs. 5,849. In order to raise this amount Mangal Das, on the 2nd July 1869, executed a bond for Rs. 9,000 in favour of one Lachminarain, mortgaging the three villages transferred by the kobala of 15th August 1860, and also Puraini Kalan.

"Balgobind died in October 1869. Immediately after his death, a dispute arose between Mangal Das and one Gorib Das, as to the succession in the mohant's gaddi of the asthal of Jankinagar. As usual, the contest opened with petitions and counter-petitions for certificates under Act XXVII of 1860; Gorib's application being dated the 1st of April 1870, and that of Mangal Das the 21st April 1870. On the 30th November 1870, the certificate case was decided by a Division Bench of the High Court in favour of Gorib Das.

"About this time Mangal Das removed from the asthal of Jankinagar, and set up a new asthal at a place called Alinuggur. In the plaintiff's account-books up to this time, the place of residence of Mangal Das was described to be Jankinagar. But the accounts of the year 1279 (September 1871), describe him to be of Alinuggur, which is retained in the accounts of all the subsequent years.

"On the 19th Bysack 1279, corresponding with the 12th May 1872, there was an adjustment of accounts between Mangal Das and the plaintiff's kothi, and the result was, that Rs. 9,358-2-9 were found due to the latter. On the same date, Mangal Das took from the plaintiff's kothi Rs. 10,641-13-3 in cash, and for the aggregate amount of Rs. 20,000 executed a bond in favour of the plaintiff. Out of Rs. 10,641-13-3 taken in cash, Lachminarain's bond-debt, which had then amounted to Rs. 8,266-8, was paid off. The cancelled bond was made over to the plaintiff, and has been produced by him in the record of this case. The [963] same four parcels of property, which had been hypothecated in Lachminarain's bond, were again hypothecated in this bond.

"On the 9th of August 1872, Gorib Das having been successful in his contest as to the succession in the gaddi of the mohants of Jankinagar, commenced a suit against Mangal Das for the recovery of possession of the four parcels of property hypothecated in Lachminarain's, as well as in the plaintiff's bond, described in the schedule of the plaint in that suit, as items 1, 2, 3, and 4, and also for seven other parcels, of which the four parcels purchased by Mangal Das in June 1869, mentioned above, formed items of claim Nos. 8, 9, 10, and 11. The Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpore, in whose Court this suit was brought on the 21st of May 1873, dismissed it so far as the aforesaid eight parcels were concerned. Gorib Das died while this suit was pending in the original Court, and the present defendant No. 1, Bawan Das, who succeeded him in the gaddi of the asthal of Jankinagar, was substituted in his place. Against the decree of the Subordinate Judge Bawan Das appealed.

"While this appeal was pending, the accounts between the plaintiff's kothi and Mangal Das were again adjusted, and Rs. 8,893, besides the bond-debt, were found due from the latter on the 30th September 1873, corresponding with the 24th Assin 1281. It appears that, in the meantime, in the month of July 1872, Rs. 9,000 had been paid by Mangal Das, between whom and the plaintiff's kothi the dealings under bahi khata continued down to the 13th August 1875. And the result of the appeal was that, on the 5th September 1874, the High Court reversed the judgment dismissing the suit, and decreed possession of three of the four parcels, viz., the three villages above named to the mohant of Jankinagar. On an appeal to Her Majesty in Council, this was confirmed, Puraini Kalan being found to have been purchased by Mangal Das with money which he had borrowed from the banking firm on his own security, was not taken from him.

"Meantime the present suit had been brought in 1876."

That part of the judgment of the High Court which related to the absence of authority in Mangal Das to bind the lands of the asthal, by the mortgage of 12th May 1872, was as follows:—

"It has been contended before us, that the finding of the lower [966] Court that the property in dispute is not trust property, is against the weight of evidence. In the view which we take of this case, it is unnecessary to pass any opinion upon this contention. Because, in our opinion, the disputed three parcels of property should not be made liable, whether they constitute trust property or not.

"We shall consider the correctness of the decree, assuming first that the disputed three parcels are not trust property.

"It seems to us that the mortgage lien, which the bond of the 12th May 1872 purports to create, can be enforced only upon either of these grounds, viz., (1) that Mangal Das had at that time full power, as agent of the mohant of Jankinagar, to execute the bond in question; or (2) that the mohants of Jankinagar having, by their conduct, led the plaintiff to believe that Mangal Das was the owner of the hypothecated property, are estopped from repudiating the transaction as not binding upon them.

"Now, as to the first of these grounds. It is not disputed that Mangal Das was appointed karpurdaz and mukhtar by the mohant Jairam Das. Nor can it be questioned, upon the evidence, that he was retained in that office by Jairam's successor, Balgobind. But after Balgobind's death in October 1869, it is alleged by the appellant that he was dismissed from that office. That an agent's power generally terminates upon the death of the principal is a proposition which requires no authority to establish. There is nothing on the record which goes to show that the successor of Balgobind re-appointed Mangal Das as his agent. On the other hand, on the death of Balgobind, a contest arose between Gorib Das and Mangal as to the right of succession to the gaddi.

"The Subordinate Judge is of opinion that Gorib Das was bound to inform the plaintiff that Mangal's power had ceased. We do not think that he was under any such obligation. The fact that, in the plaintiff's accounts, since the month of September 1871, Alinugger, instead of Jankinagar, was described to be the place of residence of Mangal, leads to the inference that the existence of an open rupture between him and the mohant of Jankinagar was known to the plaintiff. Then having regard to the fact deposed to by the plaintiff's principal witness, Baijnath Sahai, [967] that the kothi dealt with Mangal Das, not as an agent for any person but as the principal, and also to the fact that the parcels of property in dispute were in possession of Mangal Das, who claimed them as his own, we do not agree with the Subordinate Judge that the circumstance of the Government revenue being paid through the plaintiff's kothi and the omission on the part of the mohants of Jankinagar to pay the same, affords any valid ground for concluding that Mangal's agency continued even after the death of Balgobind.

"We are of opinion, therefore, that the plaintiff has failed to establish that, on the 12th May 1872, Mangal Das had any authority to execute the bond of that date so as to bind the mohant of Jankinagar."

The other ground for enforcing the mortgage of 12th May 1872 against the villages, viz., that the plaintiff had been led to believe that they were the property of Mangal Das, was held untenable, because the real nature of the transaction between Mangal Das and the asthal had been fully disclosed to the banking firm. This is set forth in the extract from the judgment of the High Court given by their Lordships.

After finding that Lachminarain's mortgage-bond of 2nd July 1869 had been paid off, and that the claim in respect of the balance due on the account down to October 1869 (when Balgobind died) was barred by limitation, the High Court concluded thus:—

"As to the other portion of the claim decreed against the appellant, it seems to us that the reasons upon which the decree of the Subordinate Judge proceeds are not tenable. The amounts in question were not paid by the plaintiff with the object of saving the estates from being sold, nor had he any interest in so saving them. The payments were made as mere advances to Mangal Das, in whose possession these estates were at that time, and who had then set up an independent title in respect of them. One or two instalments have been paid by the plaintiff even after the appellant had recovered possession of the mortgaged property. But when these payments were made, Mangal Das's appeal before the Judicial Committee was pending, and it is evident that they were made on account of Mangal Das."

[968] "Therefore, as regards the parcels of the mortgaged property, except Puraini Kalan, the plaintiff's suit cannot be sustained against the appellant, even if they are not trust-property. If they are trust-property, there cannot be any doubt that the plaintiff is not entitled to enforce the lien created by the bond of the 12th May 1872, or recover other advances made by him, because he made no enquiries as to the necessity for the loans."

On this appeal,—

Mr. J. T. Woodroffe appeared for the Appellant.

Mr. R. V. Doyle for the Respondent.

The argument for the appellant was that the mortgage-bond of the 12th May 1872 should have been held to be binding on the respondent, and also to have created a charge on all the villages comprised in it, on the ground that Mangal Das, when he executed it, had implied authority as agent. The appellant's banking firm had reason to regard him as the manager empowered to deal with the property of the asthal; and the respondent's position, he having been successor, as chela of Gorib Das, of the former mohant Balgobind Das, precluded him from disputing his liability as principal in respect of the acts done by the agent, Mangal Das, under an authority given by him, the respondent's, predecessors. The mohants who had followed Balgobind Das in the succession had stood by, with knowledge that advances were made by the banking firm for payment of the revenue upon the villages and similar charges, and Bawan Das could not be allowed, in the admitted absence of express notice of termination of the agency, to allege that the agent's authority had ceased at the date of the mortgage. The evidence had failed to fix the period when this authority had come to an end, and debits to the account of Mangal Das had continued in the books of the firm in respect of payments of which the asthal had obtained the benefit. Reference was made to Act I of 1872, (the Indian Evidence Act), s. 115.

It was further contended that, even if the three villages were not affected by the mortgage executed in 1872, the appellant was entitled to maintain a charge upon them in respect of his connection with the payment of the balance of the mortgage-debt due under the instrument of the 2nd July 1809. This prior [969] mortgage had been paid off out of the advance made by him in 1872, and having come into his possession thereupon, remained available as a security to him in equity for so much of the money raised in 1872 as had been thus appropriated for the payment of the prior charge upon the villages.

Reference was made to Hooper v. Keay (L. R., 1 Q. B. D., 178); Thompson v. Hudson (L. R., 6 Ch. Ap., 320); Moran v. Mittu Bibee (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 58).

For the respondent it was argued, as to the first of the above contentions, that the appellant could not be held to have been misled as to the real position of Mangal Das, in regard to the asthal and its property, at the time of the execution of the mortgage of 1872. The whole of the circumstances attending the substitution of the name of Mangal Das in the books of the firm, and in the Collectorate register, were known to the appellant, who, therefore, could not contend that the respondent was precluded from insisting on the actual state of things. The whole of this argument, however, was disposed of when the fact was regarded that the appellant had not accepted the mortgage of 1872 in reliance upon the agency of Mangal Das. On the contrary, he had chosen to deal with the latter as if he had been owner of the villages, though he had complete knowledge of the facts, and was aware that the three villages in question belonged to the asthal.

In answer to the argument that the mortgage of 2nd July 1869 should be held to constitute a charge for the benefit of the appellant to the amount advanced by him for the payment of it off (but advanced upon another and different security, on different terms), it was insisted that this prior mortgage had been extinguished. The intention of the parties to it had evidently been to extinguish it, for Mangal Das could have had no other object in paying it off.

Mr. J. T. Woodroffe replied.

Their Lordships' Judgment was delivered on a subsequent day (March 15th) by Sir B. Peacock.—This is an appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, upon appeal in suit brought by the appellant against the respondent and Mangal Das, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpore.

In that suit the appellant sought to recover with interest the sum of Rs. 33,989-12-6, of which Rs. 18,421-7-6 were alleged to be due upon a mortgage-bond, dated the 12th of May 1872, and the balance upon a running account from that date to the 13th of August 1875.

The plaintiff, appellant, is a banker, who for many years carried on business at Bhagalpore, not personally, but by means of gomashtras. The respondent, Bawan Das, the defendant No. 1, was the mohant of the asthal, at Jankinagar, in zillah Purneah. He is described in the plaint as chela, or disciple of mohant Gorib Das, deceased, and heir of mohant Balgobind Das, deceased.

The plaintiff claimed to recover the whole amount from the two defendants, and an order for auction sale of the property mortgaged and hypothecated under the bond for the satisfaction of the bond money. The property hypothecated by the bond consisted of one-third of mouzah Puraini Kalan, the whole of mouzah Kankerghat, the whole of mouzah Bishenpur Kantahi, and the whole of mouzah Ghuneshyampur Pathurghat, of which the last three mouzahs at the date of the bond were the property of the asthal of Jankinagar, or of the respondent, the mohant thereof.

The case was tried in the first instance by the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpore, who decreed, amongst other things, in favour of the plaintiff for the amount sued for, with costs and interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, and further ordered that the amount covered by the bond, as well as that portion of the money included in the running account, amounting to Rs. 3,166-11-6, [971] expended in payment of the Government revenue, dak contribution, and road cess be realized from the mortgaged property, and the remaining amount recovered from Mangal Das, the defendant No. 2 alone, who was also declared to be bound to pay the entire amount of the decree.

Mangal Das did not appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, but the respondent mohant Bawan Das appealed to the High Court, who reversed the decree, so far as it affected him, and ordered, amongst other things, that the plaintiff's suit against him be dismissed ; and, further, that the three mouzahs, Kankerghat, Bishenpur Kantahi, and Ghuneshyampur Pathurghat were not liable for any portion of the plaintiff's claim.

It having been decided by the High Court, and by Her Majesty in Council, in a suit brought by the present respondent against Mangal Das, that mouzah Puraini Kalan was not the property of the appellant, or of the aethal of Jankinagar, the decree of the High Court was silent as to that mouzah.

The first question in this appeal is, whether the High Court was right in holding, contrary to the opinion of the Subordinate Judge, that the other three mouzahs, in respect of which the decree of the Subordinate Judge was reversed, were not liable to be sold under the mortgage bond of the 12th of May 1872.

A question was raised before their Lordships whether the property of the aethal was inalienable, except for the benefit of the aethal in cases of necessity; but in the view which their Lordships take of the case, it is unnecessary to determine that question. They will, therefore, do as the High Court did consider the question, assuming, without deciding, that the three mouzahs were not inalienable. In that view of the case the mortgage bond of the 12th of May 1872, which was executed by Mangal Das, and not by the respondent, did not bind the property, unless Mangal Das had authority, as agent of the respondent, or of the aethal, to execute the bond, or the plaintiff was induced by some act or neglect of the respondent, or of the aethal to believe that Mangal had such authority, or that he was the actual owner of the property, and, acting under the belief so caused, dealt with Mangal as such agent or owner.

As regards the agency, it seems clear from the evidence, and [972] from the findings of both the lower Courts, that Mangal Das acted as, and was the duly authorized agent of the aethal, and of the mohants thereof, and had the management and control of their property from the time of Jairam up to the time of Mohant Balgobind's death, in or about the months of October or November 1869.

It was stated correctly by the High Court that an agent's power generally terminates upon the death of his principal, and their Lordships are of opinion that there is nothing to show that Gorib Das, who succeeded Balgobind, or the respondent who succeeded Gorib, ever re-appointed Mangal Das as agent, or led the defendant to believe that Mangal's agency continued.

The Subordinate Judge says : " It appears that, after the death of Balgobind, a dispute arose as to who was to be his successor. Both Mangal Das and Gorib Das were claimants to the succession, but Mangal failed to establish his claim, and Gorib Das obtained certificate of heirship of Balgobind. Mangal then declared himself to be absolute owner of the properties."

The finding of the High Court is to the same effect. They say that Balgobind died in October 1869, and that the certificate case was decided in favour of Gorib Das, on the 26th of November 1870.

The Subordinate Judge considered that Gorib Das was bound to give notice to the plaintiff that Mangal's authority as agent had ceased, but the circumstances are such as to render it incredible that the bank was not fully aware of Balgobind's death, and of the termination of Mangal's authority. But whether the plaintiff had or had not notice that the agency had ceased, it is clear that he cannot rely upon such want of notice unless he was thereby induced to deal with Mangal as agent. This the plaintiff did not do, for throughout, after the death of Balgobind, he dealt with Mangal as the proprietor of the estates and as a principal, and not as an agent.

It was held by the Subordinate Judge, and contended at the Bar, that the defendant was estopped from showing that the property mortgaged to the plaintiff in 1872 was not then the property of Mangal.

[973] It appears that after Balgobind became mohant, a decree for a large amount was passed against him, and there is on the record a registered deed of sale, dated the 15th August 1860, purporting to have been executed by Balgobind, in favour of Mangal Das, of the three mouzahs which were included in the mortgage bond of 1872, and are the subject of this appeal. As regards two of the mouzahs which were revenue-paying estates, the third Pathurghat Ghuneshyampur, being lakheraj, there was contemporaneously with the deed of sale, a mutation of names, and the name of Mangal Das was substituted in the Collector's register for that of the mohant of Jankinagar. In the plaintiff's kothi also the accounts, which had been previously kept in the name of Balgobind, were, in September 1861, opened, and from that time kept in the name of Mangal Das.

The following extract from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge explains the grounds of his decision on this part of the case. He says:—

"It is most true, as alleged by the defendant, that Mangal Das was believed by the plaintiff and his agents to be the absolute owner of the whole properties which belonged to the asthal. But how were they led to believe so, and who made them to believe the same? It was the defendant's ancestor, Balgobind Das, who put Mangal Das into the position of being the true owner of the asthal properties, and allowed him to deal with the plaintiff's firm as such owner. All the properties belonging to the asthal were in his name; he had absolute control over them, and no sort of objection was raised by any member of the asthal to his power; how, then, could an outsider believe him to be otherwise than a true owner of the asthal properties? Under such state of things, I cannot think the defendant can take any advantage of such belief of the plaintiff to deprive him of the money lent to Mangal Das on security of the asthal properties."

That argument of the Subordinate Judge is, in their Lordships' opinion, completely answered by the High Court. They say:—

"Although there is no evidence to show that the bill of sale of the 15th August 1860 was really executed by Balgobind, [974] yet from the fact that, shortly after that date, the name of Balgobind was removed from the Collector's register, and that of Mangal Das placed in its stead, and that the accounts in the plaintiff's kothi were transferred from one name to the other, it may be reasonably deduced that Balgobind was fully cognizant of the contrivance of putting the mortgaged property in the benami of Mangal Das, to protect it against the claims of a certain decree-holder against himself. But the plaintiff was not misled by this fraudulent device. The witness, Mohan Misser, who was the managing gomashtha of the plaintiff's kothi at that time, distinctly admits that the real nature of the transaction was fully disclosed to him by Balgobind, when the transfer of names in the accounts was effected at the instance of the latter.

"We are, therefore, of opinion that, so far as the claim relating to the bond is concerned, the grounds upon which the Subordinate Judge thinks that the parcels of mortgaged property in possession of the appellant are liable, are not tenable."

Nor can it be disputed with success, in the face of the evidence of Baijnath Sahai and of Mohan Misser, both gomashthas of the plaintiff, that, although the dealings in the time of Balgobind were with Mangal Das as principal and not as agent, they were merely nominally so, and that the credit was in reality given to the asthal in the name of Mangal Das as trustee and farzi for the purpose of concealing the names of the real parties to the transaction.

Mangal was not the real proprietor, and he was not the agent of the defendant No. 1. These facts must have been known, to the plaintiff or to his agents after the certificate case when Mangal repudiated the agency, claimed to be the absolute proprietor, and dealt with the property on his own account.

For the above reasons their Lordships are of opinion that the High Court was right in holding that the bond of the 12th May 1872 was not binding upon the asthal or upon the defendant.

It was further contended on the part of the plaintiff that, even if the bond of the 12th May 1872 was not binding upon the defendant No. 1, the plaintiff was entitled to fall back upon the mortgage bond of the 2nd July 1869 in favour of Lachmi-[975]narin, which was binding upon the asthal and the mohants thereof, inasmuch as it was executed at the time when Mangal was merely the apparent owner for the protection of Balgobind from his creditors, and whilst the relationship of principal and agent existed.

This raises the question whether that mortgage was extinguished when Lachminarain was paid, or was intended to be kept alive for the benefit of the plaintiff. Their Lordships are of opinion that it was extinguished.

It has already been shown that, at the time of the execution of the mortgage of the 12th of May 1872, the relationship of principal and agent which had existed between Mangal and the asthal in Balgobind's time had terminated, and that after Balgobind's death Mangal Das claimed to be the mohant of the asthal in his own right, and the proprietor of the estates. In that mortgage he is described as the proprietor of mouzah Puraini, etc., and after a recital, amongst other things, that he has taken a loan from Mohesh Lal of Rs. 20,000 on interest at 1 per cent. per month, of which the sum of Rs. 8,266-8 was for the payment of the balance of the debt due on Lachminarain's mortgage of 1869, he declares that he will pay in cash in one lump, the principal with the interest in the month of Jeyt 1280 Fasli, etc., and further, that until the payment of that money he has mortgaged the estates to Mohesh Lal, etc.

There is nothing in the bond, or in the evidence, or even in the surrounding circumstances, to show that Mangal intended to keep Lachminarain's mortgage alive, or that he or the plaintiff intended that the latter should hold that mortgage as an additional security for the loan.

On the 15th of May 1872 the sum of Rs. 8,382, the balance due to the estate of Lachminarain on his mortgage, was paid through the plaintiff, and on the deed a receipt for that amount was endorsed in the following words: "Received in full Rs. 8,382, up to the 15th May 1872, through Mohan Misser, gomashtha of Babu Mohesh Lal, Mahajun, and returned the bond." The bond was then delivered to the gomashtha, and was retained by the plaintiff.

It should be remarked that the mortgage to Lachminarain [976] carried interest at the rate of Re. 1-8 per month, whereas the mortgage to the plaintiff was at the rate of Re. 1 per month. It therefore seems to have been the intention of Mangal to borrow money at 1 per cent per month, partly to pay off and extinguish the mortgage debt at Re. 1-8 percent. per month, which was a charge upon the estate which he claimed in his own right. There was no intermediate mortgage between Lachminarain's mortgage and the mortgage to the plaintiff of 1872. Mangal, if the proprietor of the estate, as he then claimed and was stated in the recitals to be, had no interest in keeping alive Lachminarain's mortgage; on the contrary, it was his interest, and he must therefore, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, be presumed to have intended, that the mortgage bearing interest at Re. 1-8 a month should be paid off and extinguished. Nor upon the hypothesis that Mangal was himself the proprietor of the estates had the plaintiff any interest in keeping Lachminarain's mortgage alive, inasmuch as under the mortgage of 1872 he had the security of all the estates included in Lachminarain's mortgage, and it is clear that, even if he had taken an assignment of it, he could not have held it as a security for a higher rate of interest on the new loan than 1 per cent. a month. The only benefit that the plaintiff could have derived from taking an assignment of Lachminarain's mortgage of 1869 was that he might have the benefit of that security if it should turn out that Mangal was not the proprietor of the estates, as he represented himself to be, and, therefore, could not legally charge them. But such an event could not have been contemplated by the plaintiff. It is not probable that Mangal, would have admitted his inability to bind the property by the deed of 1872 or would have consented to do anything which could raise a doubt as to his power to bind the property as a security for so much of the Rs. 20,000 as was in excess of the amount secured by Lachminarain's mortgage. Even if he would have consented, it is not probable that the plaintiff would have advanced the full amount of Rs. 20,000 upon the security of the estates if he had had any doubt as to Mangal's title or right to charge them.

In Adams v. Angell (L. R. 5 Ch. D., 634) it was held that the question [977] whether a mortgage paid off was kept alive or extinguished depended upon the intention of the parties. The Master of the Rolls, in delivering his judgment, stated that, "in a Court of Equity it has always been held that the mere fact of a charge having been paid off does not decide the question whether it is extinguished. If it is paid off by a tenant for life without any expression of his intention, it is well established that he retains the benefit of it against the inheritance; for, although he has not declared his intention of keeping it alive, it is presumed that his intention was to do so, because it is manifestly for his benefit. On the other hand, when the owner of an estate, in fee, or in tail, pays off a charge, the presumption is the other way, but in either case the person paying off the charge can, by expressly declaring his intention, either keep it alive or destroy it. If there is no reason for keeping it alive, then, especially in the case of an owner in fee, equity will, in the absence of any declaration of intention, destroy it; but if there be any reason for keeping it alive, such as the existence of another incumbrance, equity will not destroy it." Applying that rule to the present case, it must be presumed, in the absence of any expression of intention to the contrary, that Mangal, who, when he borrowed the money to pay off Lachminarain's mortgage, claimed to be the owner of the estate, and was stated on the face of the bond to be so, intended that the money should be applied in paying off that mortgage, and in extinguishing the charge, there being no intermediate incumbrance. Although the money was paid by the plaintiff's gomashtha to Lachminarain's estate, it was paid with money borrowed from the plaintiff by Mangal, and for which Mangal was liable to him. The mortgage was therefore paid off by Mangal, and not by the plaintiff.

It must be presumed that, when the plaintiff lent the money to Mangal to pay off the mortgage, he lent it upon the security expressed in the bond, and for which he stipulated. Equity cannot give him an additional security because the security relied upon turns out to be bad, as regards a portion of the lands included in it. If an equitable transfer of Lachminarain's mortgage is held to have been included in the mortgage of 1872, it must be as a security for the whole Rs. 20,000, and thus the [978] mortgage at Re. 1-8 per mensem interest, though intended to be paid off, would be a security for Rs. 20,000 at one per cent. a month, contrary to the expressed intention of Mangal to pay it off.

It was contended on the part of the plaintiff that it must have been intended to keep alive Lachminarain's mortgage for the benefit of the plaintiff, because, when he paid the money to Lachminarain's representative, he took possession of and subsequently kept that mortgage deed. Lachminarain's representative was paid by the plaintiff as the banker of Mangal. It was paid, not by the plaintiff as the payer, but through him as the agent of Mangal the payer, and with money lent to Mangal upon the mortgage of 1872. The receipt was written on the mortgage bond in accordance with the terms of the bond, by which it was stipulated that the mortgagor should cause all payments which should be made within or after the stipulated time to be endorsed on the bond, and that besides the payments so endorsed the mortgagor should not claim the benefit of payments made in any other way. It would not have been in the course of business for the plaintiff as Mangal's banker to pay off the mortgage without taking a receipt for the money, or to take a receipt otherwise than by an endorsement on the bond. Having taken that receipt, it was the ordinary course of business for the plaintiff to retain it as a voucher for the payment made by him on behalf of his customer. He could not take, or keep the receipt without taking and keeping the bond on which it was endorsed, and it was therefore necessary for him to take and keep the bond, independently of the course of business, by which an agent paying off a mortgage on behalf of his principal takes back the mortgage on his behalf, instead of leaving it outstanding in the hands of the mortgagee.

Mr. Woodroffe, after the close of his argument, referred to several cases, but none of them show that a mortgage when paid off and intended by the parties to be extinguished is presumed to have been intended to be kept alive.

Another question is whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover the Rs. 5,849 applied out of the moneys raised by Lachminarain's mortgage in purchasing four small properties, which [979] may be called 8, 9, 10, and 11, and which, by the High Court and by Her Majesty in Council, in a suit brought by the present defendant against Mangal Das, were held to be the property of the asthal, because they were purchased with money raised by the mortgage to Lachminarain. Those four properties were not included in the mortgage of 1872, nor are they included in the suit now under appeal. It is difficult to conceive how, if Lachminarain's mortgage was not kept alive and transferred to the plaintiff as a security for his loan of 1872, the right of Mangal, if he had any, against the asthal in consequence of the application of Rs. 5,849 raised by that mortgage in the purchase of property now held to be that of the asthal, can, in the absence of an express intention to that effect, be presumed to have been included in the mortgage of 1872 as an additional security for the loan of that date. The asthal may be liable to Mangal, but that must depend upon the state of accounts between them, as stated by the Judicial Committee, on the 27th June 1877, in their reasons for the advice given to Her Majesty in Council in the appeal of Mangal Das and the present respondent. Mangal Das claiming to be the proprietor of the estates included in the mortgage of 1872 retained possession and received the profits of those estates, as well as of the four small properties purchased with the Rs. 5,849. Mangal must render his accounts before he can be held to be entitled to any portion of the Rs. 5,849. Unless Mangal's claim against the asthal was included in the mortgage of 1872, and can be held to have been assigned to the plaintiff as a security for the loan, there is no privity between the plaintiff and the defendant No. 1 in respect of the Rs. 5,849.

At all events, the plaintiff cannot be entitled to any greater or other rights than those of Mangal in respect of the Rs. 5,849.

It is scarcely necessary to refer to the fact that the plaint does not contain a claim on the part of the plaintiff to recover on Lachminarain's mortgage, or to recover the Rs. 5,849 expended by Mangal in the purchase of the lots above referred to as 8, 9, 10, and 11. This is not a mere technical objection, for, if the claim had been made, or an issue raised relating to it, the defendant No. 1, respondent, might have called witnesses to prove that there was no intention to keep alive Lachminarain's mort-[980]gage, or to include it or Mangal's right to the Rs. 5,849, claimed on account of the purchase of lots 8, 9, 10, and 11, in the security to the plaintiff for the loan of Rs. 20,000.

As to the sum of Rs. 3,166-11-6 awarded by the first Court to be realized from the mortgaged estates on account of money expended on account of the payment of revenue, road cesses, etc., on account of the estates, the credit was given to Mangal and not to the plaintiff, and there is no privity between the plaintiff and defendant No. 1 in respect of it. Mangal may possibly be entitled to it, but that must depend upon the state of accounts between him and the aethal, which cannot be taken in the suit now under appeal.

Their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm the decree of the High Court, and to dismiss this appeal. The appellants must pay the costs of this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 23rd July, 1883.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE AND
MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON.

Khatija Bibi.....Plaintiff

Taruk Chunder Dutt.....Defendant.*

Transfer of case—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), section 23—Practice—Ground for transfer.

Section 23 of Act XIV of 1882 is only intended to provide for those cases where, on the ground of expense or convenience, or some other good reason, the Court thinks that the place of trial ought to be changed.

Parties desirous of obtaining the transfer of a case from one forum to another ought clearly to explain to the Court by petition and affidavit what is the nature of the claim and defence ; they should further state what are the issues and the evidence required, and then satisfy the Court [981] that, either on the ground of expense or convenience, or otherwise the place of trial ought to be changed. *

THIS was a reference under the provisions of s. 23 of Act XIV of 1882.

The defendant in the suit asked that the case might be transferred from the file of the Second Judge of Dacca to that of the Sub-Judge of Furridpore, on the ground that the bulk of the property in suit was situate in Furridpore, and that some of his co-sharers in the ijara were residents of Furridpore, and that it would be inconvenient to take his witnesses to Dacca. The plaintiff among his objections stated that, though the bulk of the property was situate in Furridpore, a portion of it was in Dacca ; that the defendant resided at Dacca ; and that the witnesses likely to be summoned also resided at Dacca.

Baboo Akhil Chunder Sen for the Plaintiff.

No one appeared for the Defendant.

The Order of the High Court (GARTH, C.J., and MACPHERSON, J.) was as follows :—

Garth, C.J.—We see no sufficient ground for transferring this suit from the Dacca Court to that of Furridpore.

Prima facie, the plaintiff as the arbiter litis has a right to bring his suit in any Court which the law allows ; and s. 23 is only intended, as we consider to provide for those cases, where, on the ground of expense or convenience, or some other good reason, the Court thinks that the place of trial ought to be changed.

If for instance, in this case, the defendant could have shown us that great expense could have been saved, or that the balance of convenience was strongly in favour of the case being tried at Furridpore, we might have thought it right to grant his application. But looking at the allegations on both sides, we think it very difficult to say where the balance of convenience lies.

* Civil Reference No. 7 of 1883 made by J. Pratt, Esq., Officiating District Judge of Dacca, under s. 23, Civil Procedure Code, for transfer of a case from one Court to another, dated the 18th June 1883.

The plaintiff, on the one hand, says that, though a great part of the property in suit is in Furridpore, some of it is in Dacca; that the defendant himself lives at Dacca, and carries on business there; and that all the witnesses who are likely to be summoned in the cause reside at Dacca.

The defendant, on the other hand, says that the bulk of the property in suit is situated in Furridpore; that some of the persons who are co-sharers with him in the ijara, and who ought, [982] therefore, to have been made parties to the suit, reside at Furridpore; and that it would be very inconvenient to bring the necessary evidence relating to the estate to Dacca.

It would seem from those counter allegations that, notwithstanding all the defendant says, the balance of convenience may be in favour of the case being tried at Dacca. It certainly does not follow that, because the bulk of the land in suit may be at Furridpore, and that some of the co-sharers may live there, the balance, either of convenience or of expense, is in favour of trying the case there.

Parties who desire to have a case transferred from one forum to another ought clearly to explain to the Court by petition and affidavit what is the nature of the claim and defence, and what the issues are; they should state what evidence will be required, and then satisfy the Court that, either on the ground of expense or convenience or otherwise, the place of trial ought to be changed.

Application dismissed.

Abscinding of Accused—

Attachment by Magistrate—Sale in execution of decree—Sale by Magistrate—Code of Criminal Procedure, (Act X of 1872), ss. 172, 173. A, having been accused of an offence under the Indian Penal Code absconded, and his property was, on the 7th of August 1878, attached by the Magistrate, under s. 172 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, Act X of 1872. While the property was so under attachment, it was attached by B in execution of a money-decree against A, and sold on the 15th of January 1879, B being the purchaser. On the 21st of April 1880, the Magistrate sold the property to C. It did not appear whether the time fixed by the Magistrate's proclamation for A's appearance had expired at the date of the sale to B. Held, in a suit for possession by B against C, that the title obtained by C under the Magistrate's sale was superior to the title (if any) obtained by B at the sale in execution of the money decree. Scinde, that after the date of the attachment by the Magistrate under s. 172 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and during its continuance, no title could be conferred by an attachment and sale subsequently made in execution of a money-decree.

 A certificate of guardianship under Act XI of 1858 takes effect, not from the date when it is applied for, nor when an order granting it is passed, but from the date when it is actually issued. Therefore, where an application for a certificate was made in 1877, and an order granting it was passed in December 1879, but the certificate was not issued until December 1881, held, that the minor, in respect of whose property the certificate was applied for, who had between the date of the application and the issue of the certificate attained the age of 18 years, and signed a promissory note, was not entitled to take advantage of s. 3 of the Majority Act, 1875, and set up the plea of minority as a defence to a suit on the note.

NIHAL CHUND, alias CHUTTO LAL v. RAMESHARI DASSEE ... IX 214

Failure to produce evidence at hearing. At the hearing of a suit a party, though he had sufficient warning of what was necessary, did not take the proper steps to cause the production of the documentary, and only admissible, evidence of a material fact which had to be proved by him; and the decision was against him. The record of another proceeding would, it was said, have supplied this evidence; and an application had been previously made on which the order of the Judge was that "the matter would be decided when the case was tried, and the record would be sent for, if necessary." No further application to the Court was made, and no attempt to supply this evidence. Held, that if there had been, as there might have been, an oversight by the party in not calling the attention of the Judge to the above order, and in not tendering the evidence, there had been no omission on the Judge's part affording ground for appeal.

In Criminal case—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), s. 36 (Act X of 1882), s. 108—Effect of Repeal of Act. On the 9th of December 1882, a person was convicted under ss. 457 and 109 of the Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment by a Deputy Magistrate in Assam, exercising special powers under s. 36 of the old Code of Criminal Procedure, Act X of 1872. The new Code of Criminal Procedure came into force on the 1st of January 1883. The prisoner presented an appeal to the High Court from the conviction and sentence abovementioned on the 23rd of January 1883. Held, by FIELD, J. (MITER, J., expressing no decided opinion) that the case was governed by s. 108 of the new Code of Criminal Procedure, and that no appeal lay to the High Court.

Order in execution of decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 214 and 558, cls. (j) and (r). An order for attachment and sale of property in execution of a decree, is an order "of the same nature with" an order made in the course of a suit for attachment of the debtor's property. The latter order is appealable under s. 588, cl. (r), of the Code of Civil Procedure. It follows that an order for attachment and sale in execution of a decree is [according to the requirement of s. 558, cl. (j)] "of the same nature with appealable orders made in the course of a suit;" and therefore is appealable under that section.

Award—Application to have an award filed in Court—Private arbitration—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 525, 526. Where an application is made under s. 525 of the Code of Civil Procedure to have an award filed in Court, and it appears to the Court, on cause shown, why the award should not be filed, that there is a reasonable dispute between the parties on any of the grounds mentioned in ss. 520 or 521, the application should be dismissed. Under s. 525 of the Code of Civil Procedure, sufficient cause may be shown by affidavit or verified petition. See Ram Chowdhry v. Denobundhoo Chowdhry, and Sashit Chaman Chatterjee v. Tarak Chandra Chatterjee referred to.

ICHAMOYEE CHOWDHURANEE v. PROSUNNO NATH CHOWDHURI ... IX 557

Award—Time to file an award—Limitation (Act XI of 1877), sched. II, Art. 176—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, ss. 525, 526—Powers of Court—Cause shown against filing award, Validity of—Powers of Arbitrators—Review of Award. Where an award was made and signed by the arbitrators on the 5th of August 1881, but was not delivered to the parties till the 13th of September following, semble, that an application to file the award, made on the 25th of February 1882, under the provisions of s. 525 of the Code of Civil Procedure, was not barred by limitation. It is clearly the intention of the Legislature that a party to an arbitration should have six months to enforce the award, under s. 525 of the Code of Civil Procedure, from the time when he is in a position to enforce it. Under ss. 525 and 526 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the Code has full power to enter into the question of the sufficiency of the cause shown against the filing in Court of an award. Dandekar v. Dandekars, followed; Ichamoyee Chowdranee v. Prosunno Nath Chowdhuri, dissented from. After an award has been made and handed to the parties the functions of the arbitrators cease. They have no power afterwards to deal with an application for review of their decision.

IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF DUTTO SINGH ... IX 575

Validity of Award—Absence of some of the Arbitrators. A case was referred to the arbitration of five persons, with a proviso that in the event of any two of the arbitrators being absent, the arbitration should be continued by the other three. Two of the arbitrators named were the pleaders on either side, and these two, with the consent of the parties, ceased to act as arbitrators, but argued the matter before the other arbitrators. Held, that the award made by the other three arbitrators named was a valid award.

Arms Act—

XI of 1878, ss. 19, (f), and ss. 25, 30.—Arms in a temple—Confiscation of arms used for purposes of worship—Police Inspector specially empowered—License to possess arms—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), s. 579, and sched. iv—“Offences against other laws.” A collection of fire-arms, consisting of four small cannons, four pistols, and thirty-one muskets, had been kept as objects of worship in a Sikh temple in Patna for upwards of two centuries. The Mohunt of the temple neglected to take out a license in respect of these arms under Act XI of 1878. A Police Inspector, who was appointed to see that the provisions of the latter Act were obeyed, searched the temple on information received, and, having found the arms, prosecuted the person who had charge of the temple. The latter was convicted by the Deputy Magistrate of Patna under s. 19, cl. (f) of Act XI of 1878, and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 50, or to be rigorously imprisoned for two months. The Deputy Magistrate also ordered the arms to be confiscated, and directed that their value and the fine should be divided between the informer and the Police Inspector. On a reference from the Sessions Judge of Patna—

Held, with reference to Act X of 1872, s. 579, and the last heading to sched. iv of the same Act, and to s. 19, cl. (f) of Act XI of 1878, that the proceedings of the Police Inspector and the conviction of the accused were not illegal.

There is nothing in the Arms Act to exempt the custodians of a temple from complying with the requirements of the Arms Act, either by taking out a license or obtaining exemption under s. 27.

Section 25 of the Arms Act appears to refer to cases in which the Magistrate considers that arms, whether under a license or not, are possessed for an illegal purpose, or under circumstances such as to endanger the public peace.

Section 30 of the Arms Act appears to contemplate the presence of some specially empowered officer beside the officer conducting the search.

Arrears of Rent—

Suit for. See BENG. ACT VIII OF 1869, s. 59: ENHANCEMENT OF RENT: LIMITATION: PARTIES: RES JUDICATA.

Payment of patni rent by darpatnidar to save patni from sale under Reg. VIII of 1819. In a suit by the purchaser of a patni against a darpatnidar for arrears of rent of the year 1285 (1878), it appeared that before the plaintiff's purchase, the darpatnidar had paid the amount of arrears of patni rent for the year 1284 (1877), in order to save the patni from being sold under Reg. VIII of 1819, and that the amount so paid considerably exceeded the darpatni rent due at the date of suit.

Held, that the defendant was entitled to deduct from the rent claimed the amount paid under the Regulation in excess of the darpatni rent due up to the end of 1284.

But, the object of the section being to prevent a forfeiture, if the rent be paid within the time specified by the section, the Courts will grant relief against a forfeiture where the rent is so paid.

- Suit for Rent below Rs. 100—Landlord and Tenant—Special Appeal.* In a suit for rent below Rs. 100, the defendant set up the title of a third person (the third person was, however, no party to the proceedings), and the lower Court finding that the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between the parties and that the rent was unpaid, decided the suit on that ground in favour of the plaintiffs. The defendant appealed to the District Judge, who decided that the defendant had paid the rent, and reversed the decision of the Court below. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court, but were met with the objection that no special appeal would lie. Held, that s. 102 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869 prohibited the appeal, the case being one between landlord and tenant, and there consequently being no question relating to title as between parties having conflicting claims.

It was suggested that the servant should have been convicted under s. 53, and that the cooly had committed no offence. Held, that the conviction of the cooly was illegal, and must be set aside. Held, also, that the servant was properly convicted, and whether under s. 60 or s. 53 was immaterial. *Queen v. The object of Act XXVII of 1860 is not to enable parties to litigate questions of disputed title, but to enable debtors to pay the debts due by them with safety to the representatives of deceased Hindus and others ; and to facilitate the collection of such debts by removing all doubts as to the legal title to demand and receive the same. In other words, the objects of the Act are to enable debtors to get sufficient acquittances when they pay money due to the estate of a deceased ; and to preserve that estate from loss by giving some one the right to collect the debts, lest they should be lost, e.g., by the operation of the law of limitation. The holder of a certificate is a trustee liable to account for the moneys received by him to the legal heirs or representatives of the deceased.

Held, that the charge was defective and inexact as regarded the second and third clauses of the definition of murder in s. 300 of the Penal Code. With reference to the second clause, it should have run "likely to cause the death of A, the person to whom the harm was caused." With reference to the third clause, it should have said "ordinary course of nature."

Chief Justice—

Power of—Refusal by Bench of Judges to hear Affidavits in support of application for transfer of trial to another District—Application to the Chief Justice to appoint another Bench to hear and determine case—Interlocutory order in Criminal matters. Finality of—High Court Charter Act (24 and 25 Vict. c. 104), s. 14. Where a rule had been obtained on behalf of a prisoner, calling on the prosecution to show cause why the case should not be transferred for trial to some other Court of Session than that in which it was then pending, on the ground that such strong feeling and prejudice existed in the district against the accused as to render it unlikely that he would get a fair trial, a Division Bench of the High Court, duly constituted, consisting of two Judges, refused to allow the affidavits in support of the application to be read, and discharged the rule. Subsequently, an application was made to the Chief Justice to appoint another Bench of the High Court to hear and determine the rule, on the ground that it had not been heard, and that, consequently, the order passed by the Bench discharging it was null and void,—

Held, that the Chief Justice, having once appointed a Bench under s. 14 of the Charter Act (24 and 25 Vict., c. 104) to hear any particular case, has no power to interfere when the case has been disposed of by that Bench.

Chief Justice—(concluded.)

Held also, that the refusal of the Bench to hear the affidavits read, if an error at all, was simply one of law in the course of dealing with a matter clearly within their jurisdiction; and that, therefore, the decision could not be treated as a nullity, or its legality questioned by the Chief Justice.

Held further, that whether the judgment had been signed or not, previous to the application being made to the Chief Justice, an interlocutory order of such a nature in a criminal matter is not final, but may be reviewed or reconsidered, or a similar application may be entertained as often as the Court in its discretion may think proper.

244, cl. (c). See EXECUTION OF DECREE.

s. 245—Application for execution of Decree—Amendment—Time fixed by Court—Jurisdiction—Ultra vires. On the 9th of April 1880 A applied for execution of a decree, which he had obtained against B. On the 20th of April 1880 the Judge of the Court, under the provisions of s. 245 of the Code of Civil Procedure, ordered the application to be amended within seven days. This order was disobeyed, but no order rejecting the application was asked for or passed. On the 11th of May 1880 the applicant prayed leave to make the amendment, which prayer was granted.

Held, that the order of the 11th of May 1880, granting leave to amend, was not ultra vires of the Judge, under the provisions of s. 245 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Company—

Articles of Association—Power to borrow—Borrowing in excess of power in Articles of Association—Ratification. Under the articles of association of a limited company, the directors had power, from time to time as they might see fit, without any previous consent of the shareholders, to borrow any sum of money not exceeding Rs. 50,000, on the bill, bond, note, or other security of the company, upon such terms as they might think proper; and had power, with the sanction of a special resolution of the company previously obtained at a general meeting, to borrow any sum of money not exceeding in the whole, together with the Rs. 50,000, the sum of Rs. 1,00,000. K advanced sums of money to the company amounting in 1879 to over Rs. 80,000. No previous sanction was given to any of these advances. On the 4th October 1879, an extraordinary general meeting of shareholders was held, at which a resolution was passed sanctioning a mortgage to K, of the whole of company's property, except a certain garden, to secure the payment of a sum, not exceeding Rs. 1,00,000, for advances already made and to be made, with interest at 7 per cent. This resolution was confirmed on the 16th of October, and the mortgage was executed on the 22nd of December 1879. Subsequently the company was ordered to be wound up, and K, advanced a claim for Rs. 1,20,787.—Held, that there is a distinction between loans which a company is empowered to raise under its borrowing powers, and debts which, in meeting its current liabilities and in the actual carrying on of its affairs, the company, or its agents on its behalf, have contracted; and that the advances made by K, did not amount to a borrowing within the meaning of the articles of association. In re Cefn. Cilcen Mining Company and Waterlow v. Sharp followed. Held, also, that the borrowing powers conferred by the articles of association justified a mortgage, the object of which was in part to cover previously incurred liabilities.

acted on his own account and as guardian of his minor brothers. In a suit by A to carry out the terms of the petition, B contended that undue advantage had been taken of his youth and inexperience; that the agreement was invalid; and that there was no consideration. It appeared that, at the time of the agreement, there was a bond fide dispute as to the rights of the parties, and no evidence of fraud was adduced.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree.

Principles upon which the Court acts in setting aside compromises considered.

There is nothing in Hindu law which makes illegal an agreement, entered into by expectants, to divide a particular property in a certain way, on the happening of a particular contingency.

Nor is such an agreement contrary to public policy.

Condition precedent—Stipulation in restraint of trade—Contract Act, s. 27—Estoppel. The plaintiffs, on the 4th August 1881, entered into a contract with the defendant, for the sale to the latter of a quantity of goods of a certain description "to be delivered up to the 31st December 1881." The plaintiffs stipulated that they would make no sales of goods of the same description to others before the 1st December 1881; and the contract contained an arbitration-clause to the effect, that "if the buyers object to accept all or any of the goods offered to them by the sellers in fulfilment of the contract on the ground of any variance, difference from the sample or muster, inferiority in weight or quality or colour, or damage or defect, or any other ground whatsoever," such objections should, in case of disagreement be referred to two arbitrators, one to be named by the sellers, and the other by the buyers. Such arbitrators to decide "whether the buyers' objections were valid and if so what allowance on the whole contract price will be a reasonable adequate compensation to the buyers for such variance, difference, inferiority, damage or defect, if any, and such decision shall be final and binding on both parties." If either buyers or sellers failed "to name an arbitrator within two days after being requested by the other to do so, the decision of the arbitrators named by the buyers or sellers, as the case may be, shall be final and binding on both parties." The goods arrived in Calcutta between the 4th and 24th November 1881. On the 15th August the plaintiff entered into other contracts with other buyers for the sale of the same description of goods at a lower price than that at which they had sold to the defendant; these contracts were on the terms that the goods were not to arrive in Calcutta until after the 31st December 1881. The defendant refused to accept the goods on the ground that the plaintiffs had committed a breach of the contract by entering into other agreements for sale of the same description of goods before the 1st December, and refused to pay the difference between the contract price and the market value which the plaintiffs demanded from him. The plaintiffs thereupon appointed an arbitrator, who (the defendant declining to appoint an arbitrator) proceeded to act in the matter, and finding that the plaintiffs had not committed a breach of the contract made an award in their favour for Rs. 850, the difference in price of the goods at the contract and market values. The plaintiffs sued to recover the amount due to them under the award, or in the alternative for Rs. 850 as damages for non-acceptance of the goods.

Held, that the defendant was not estopped by the award from setting up the breach of the stipulation not to sell other goods of the same description before the 1st December 1881 as a defence to the suit.

Per GARTH, C.J.—The question whether the plaintiffs, by making the other contracts, had committed a breach of the stipulation was not properly a subject of reference to the arbitrator under the arbitration-clause. The general words in that clause, "or any other grounds whatsoever," mean any other grounds of a like character, and do not include a pure question of law.

Held also, that the stipulation itself amounted to a condition precedent to the defendant's obligation to accept the goods.

Held further, a stipulation in a contract prohibiting any sales of goods to others during a particular period, of a similar description to those bought under the contract, is not a stipulation in restraint of trade under s. 27 of Act IX of 1872.

CARLISLES NEPHEWS & CO. v. RICKNAUTH BUCKTEARMULLI. ... VIII 809

Construction of contract—Printed form of contract—Writing and printing—Sale of goods to arrive. The defendants contracted to purchase certain piece goods from the plaintiffs, who were dealers in those goods. The contract of sale was written out on one of the printed forms of the plaintiffs' firm, which forms contained in print, the words "now in course of landing or in the said godowns" and "now on board ship." As a matter of fact, well known to both parties, the goods contracted for were neither in the godowns nor on board ship. Held, that under the circumstances, the printed words above set out formed no part of the contract entered into between the parties.

Sale of goods—Delivery by instalments—Tender. A contract made between the plaintiffs and the defendant stipulated for the delivery to the defendant of 7,500 bags of Madras Coast castor seed, which were to be shipped "per steamers," and then stated that shipment of 2,500 bags was to be made in December. On the 12th December 1,690 bags arrived by Steamer 'Shahjehan,' and notice in writing was given to the defendant, who requested that the delivery might be postponed owing to his not having godown room. On the 14th December the defendant refused to take the 1,690 bags, on the ground that he was not bound to take a portion of the 2,500 bags, but only the whole at one time. On the 16th December the defendant tendered the value of 2,500 bags which was refused, and on the same day the plaintiffs resold the 1,690 bags. On the 17th December the plaintiffs informed the defendant that 810 bags, the balance of the 2,500 the December shipment, were due on the 18th, and they did arrive on the 19th, but were refused by the defendant on the same ground as before, and they were accordingly resold by the plaintiffs. Held, that according to the terms of the contract there was a legal and proper tender of the December shipment by the plaintiffs, and that the defendant having committed a breach of the contract in not accepting the bags, the plaintiffs were justified in reselling them at once and suing for damages.

SIMSON v. GORA CHAND DOSS IX 473

Surety—Lex Loci Contractus. Under a contract made and to be performed in the territory of an Independent State, between the State and contractors, the latter received an advance of money, for the repayment whereof, in case the contract should fail, a third party became surety to the State. The contract failed and was terminated by the State, to which the surety repaid, on its demand, the money advanced, with some deduction on account of a part performance.

For this amount the surety sued the principals, who were subject to the jurisdiction of the Court in British India. In deciding whether the contract had or had not failed within the meaning of the suretyship undertaken by the plaintiffs—held that not the law of British India, but what was in the contemplation of the parties as to the result of the contract when they entered into it, must be regarded.

s. 23—Unlawful agreement—Void consideration—Public policy—Agreement to suppress criminal proceedings. The plaintiff sued the defendant for possession of a house and premises, which he had bought from the latter. The defence was, that the sale was made for the purpose of raising money to be given to certain third parties as a bribe to induce them to withdraw a charge of criminal breach of trust, which they had preferred against the defendant. The lower Appellate Court held that the defence was bad, on the ground that there was no evidence to show that the plaintiff was a party to, or in any way concerned in, the unlawful agreement, and gave the plaintiff a decree.

Held, that the decree was correct, as there was no evidence to show either that the plaintiff knew of the agreement to suppress the criminal prosecution, or that any money had been paid in pursuance of such unlawful agreement.

Contribution, suit for—

Decree against several defendants jointly—Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court—Second appeal—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 69, 70. A suit for contribution not founded upon contract, but in respect of money for which the plaintiff and the defendants in the contribution-suit had been by a former decree made jointly liable, is not within the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes, which cannot deal with questions of equity. A second appeal will, therefore, lie in such a suit.

At the same time B leased his share to the defendant for the same purpose for a term ending in October 1881. A and B sold their shares to the plaintiff in the year 1879. HURRO DURGA CHOWDHURI v. SURUT SUNDARI DEBI ... VIII 332

Set-off of costs ordered on the disposal of a preliminary point against costs awarded at the final disposal of the suit—Costs of partly successful appeal. It is not the usual practice, when costs of an interlocutory proceeding have been disposed off, to consider that an award of the general costs of the suit interferes with the order as to the partial costs. A prior decree having given the costs incurred on the disposal of a preliminary point to the party successfully raising it, a later decree without expressly referring to the former, gave the costs of the suit, generally, to the opposite side. Held, that the costs due under the prior decree should be set off against those due under the later. Although an appellant only partly succeeded in his appeal, the whole of his claim having been opposed in the Courts below on an untenable ground, held, that there was no reason for departing from the general rule that the defeated party should pay the costs.

Art. vi, cl. 17, Sched. ii—Stamp on memorandum of appeal in partition-suit—Valuation of suit. The stamp-fee payable on appeals to the High Court in suits asking for "partition, the separation of a share and for khas possession of that share after separation," is that leviable under art. vi, cl. 17, sched. ii of the Court-Fees Act.

For the purpose of jurisdiction the Court should be guided by the value of the property in suit, but the amount of the stamp-fee should be governed by a different principle.

Neglect to exercise such right—Deposition of medical witness—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), ss. 240, 323—Duty of a Judge when charging a jury—constructive murder under s. 340 of Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)—Effect on others charged under s. 149—Irregularities in procedure and admission of evidence.

Per FIELD, J.—The grounds upon which the opposite party is permitted to inspect a writing, and to refresh the memory of a witness, are three-fold :—(i) to secure the full benefit of the witness's recollection as to the whole of the facts ; (ii) to check the use of improper documents ; (iii) to compare his oral testimony with his written statement.

Per FIELD, J.—The opposite party has a right to look at any particular writing before or at the moment when the witness uses it to refresh his memory in order to answer a particular question; but if he then neglects to exercise his right, he cannot continue to retain the right throughout the whole of the subsequent examination of the witness.

Per FIELD, J.—Under the provisions of s. 323 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the examination of a medical witness taken and duly attested may be given in evidence in any criminal trial; but in order that such evidence may be admissible against any individual accused person, the examination must have been taken in the presence of the accused person.

Per FIELD, J.—It is the duty of a Judge to give a direction upon the law to the jury so far as to make them understand the law as bearing upon the fact; and if he does not give them an explanation of the law sufficiently comprehensive to enable them to decide the particular issue, it is a misdirection.

Per FIELD, J.—Where a prisoner is constructively guilty of murder under s. 34 of the Penal Code, it is doubtful if he can be said to have committed the offence of murder within the meaning of s. 149, so as to make other prisoners, by a double construction, guilty of murder.

Per FIELD, J.—Irregularities under s. 240 of the Criminal Procedure Code in the selection of the jurors, and in the admission of the deposition of a medical witness treated, it not being shown that the prisoners had been thereby prejudiced, as being objections which ought not to be entertained for the purpose of interfering with the verdict, regard being had to the provisions of s. 283 of the Criminal Procedure Code and s. 167 of the Evidence Act.

s. 263—Discretion of Court—Verdict of jury—Principles guiding the Court's discretion under s. 263 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872)—Intention and inference of fraud. Notwithstanding the large discretionary powers vested in the High Court under s. 263 of Act X of 1872, the Court will adhere generally to the principle of the Courts in England, viz., that the Court will not set aside the verdict of a jury unless it be perverse and potently wrong or may have been induced by the error of the Judge; and when the Court is asked to do so on the ground that the verdict is against the weight of evidence, the question is, not whether the learned Judge who tried the case was or was not dissatisfied with the verdict, or whether he would have come to the same conclusion as the jury, but whether the verdict was such as reasonable men ought to have come to. Where a person, in the course of an action brought against him to gain possession of a property, uses a forged document for the purpose of supporting his title, though there may be no necessity for the use of it, such a user is clearly fraudulent. A general intention to defraud, without the intention of causing wrongful gain to one person or wrongful loss to another, would, if proved, be sufficient to support a conviction; and such an intention is a necessary inference which the jury should be directed to draw, if they are satisfied that the accused has uttered a forged document as a true one, meaning it to be taken as such, and knowing it to be forged. Under s. 263 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, a Court is authorized to ask the jury such questions as are necessary to ascertain what their verdict really is; but where the verdict, although perhaps erroneous, is not ambiguous, it is the duty of the Judge to record it without further question.

s. 349—Acquittal of prisoner—Withdrawal of pardon granted to approver after judgment of acquittal—Conviction on trial improperly originated, Power of High Court to set aside. At a sessions trial, the Judge, after acquitting the prisoner, passed an order withdrawing a pardon already granted to an approver (who had given his evidence as such approver before the Sessions Court), and ordered his commitment.

The approver was charged, tried, and found guilty. Held by MITTER, J., that the order withdrawing the pardon and committing the approver was contrary to the provisions of s. 349 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the words "before judgment has been passed" being words inserted in the section to put a limit to the time within which the power of withdrawal of the pardon conferred in the Court of Sessions may be actually exercised; and that therefore the trial of the approver was illegal.

The power of directing commitments conferred upon the Sessions Court by s. 349 of the Criminal Procedure Code can be exercised only before judgment has been passed.

Held by MACLEAN, J., that it is not necessary that the order should be made before judgment is passed, but that it must appear to the Judge before he passes judgment, that the conditions of the pardon have not been complied with; and that, in the present case, it was impossible to hold, that because the actual order of commitment of the accused was written (although in the judgment) after the acquittal, therefore it did not appear to the Judge before passing judgment that there were grounds for his order.

Per MACLEAN, J.—The High Court may, without reference to the Local Government, set aside a conviction made upon a trial improperly originated.

ss. 445, 446, 453—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 167, 466, 471—Separate trials—Offences of the same kind—Amendment of charge. The prisoner was committed for trial on fifty-five charges, including three charges under ss. 167, 466, and 471 of the Penal Code. At the trial before the District Judge sitting with assessors, the Court informed the prisoner that the trial would be confined to the three charges last mentioned. The prisoner was convicted on these, but the Court allowed evidence to be adduced by the prosecution on all the remaining charges, and in respect of these the prisoner was acquitted. On appeal to the High Court,— Held, that the District Judge should have exercised the powers conferred on him by ss. 445 and 446 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and then have proceeded to hold separate trials; that he should not have tried together the charges under ss. 167 and 466 of the Penal Code, as the offences were not of the same kind within the meaning of s. 453 of the Code of Criminal Procedure; but the convictions on these charges were upheld, as it did not appear that the prisoner had been prejudiced by the mode of trial adopted.

The Sessions Judge should also conform strictly to the words of s. 309, and require each assessor to state his opinion orally. The Sessions Judge should not utilize the services of the pleader for the prosecution for the purpose of recording his summing up to the assessors. Hindu Law—Reversioner—Alienation by Hindu Widow—Parties—Vested and contingent interest—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42. The plaintiff, claiming to be entitled in reversion to certain property on the death of his grandfather's widow, sued for a declaration that certain alienations made by the widow were void as against him. To this suit the widow and her alienee were defendants. The defence was, that the plaintiff was not the reversioner, and certain parties, who claimed to be the real reversioners, intervened, and were made defendants by order of the Court. The plaintiff obtained a declaration of his reversionary right, and the deeds of sale were, on certain conditions, declared void as against him. The intervenors appealed to the High Court.

Held on appeal, that, notwithstanding the provisions of s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief sought, and that the defendants, who claimed as reversioners, should not have been made parties to the suit.

Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act refers only to existing and vested rights, and not to contingent rights.

Construction of decree—Mortgage-decree directing accounts, &c., to be taken and report given—Tender of principal and interest before report—Refusal to accept tender and subsequent charge of interest. A decree directed accounts to be taken of what was due for principal and interest under a mortgage, such interest to be allowed "up to the time of payment hereinafter mentioned or until six months from the date of the decree," whichever first should happen; and further directed the plaintiff to pay what should be reported due for principal and interest up to the date of payment and costs, with interest at 6 per cent. from the date of taxation until payment, within six months after the Registrar should make his report. The plaintiff tendered a sum sufficient to cover the principal and interest due, but insufficient to cover costs, at a time prior to the drawing up of the Registrar's report. Held, that the payment of principal and interest "hereinafter mentioned" referred to a time after the Registrar had made his report, because the sum to be paid was a sum reported to be due by the Registrar, and that, therefore, a tender made before the Registrar's report was given was not a sufficient tender to stop interest from the date of the tender.

Easement—

Implied grant—Modes of acquiring easements—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 26.

In a suit for an injunction to restrain the defendant from using a path on the plaintiff's land it appeared that the land held by the plaintiff and defendant had originally belonged to one owner, and that the plaintiff and the defendant had obtained their respective tenements more than twenty years previously. The path had been admittedly made by the original owner, but the plaintiff contended that, when he purchased the land, he had closed the path. This the Munsif disbelieved, and refused the injunction. The District Judge, treating the case as if it fell under s. 26 of the Limitation Act, and being of opinion that the defendant had not proved twenty years' peaceable, open and uninterrupted exercise of the right of way, gave the plaintiff a decree.

Held, that the mode of acquiring an easement provided by s. 26 of the Limitation Act is not the only way in which an easement may be acquired, but an easement may also be acquired by implied grant. In the present case the use of the path might be absolutely necessary to the enjoyment of the defendant's tenement, in which case there would be an easement of necessity; or the use of the path, though not absolutely necessary to the enjoyment of the defendant's tenement, might be necessary for its enjoyment in the state in which it was at the time of severance, and in this case, if the easement were apparent and continuous, there would be a presumption that it passed with the defendant's tenement.

Right to passage of water—Water, in defined channel. From time immemorial a certain 'al' formed the boundary of two pieces of land belonging to the plaintiffs and the defendants respectively. The plaintiffs' land was on a higher level than that of the defendants, and from time immemorial the surplus water used to flow from the plaintiffs' land through certain passages in the 'al' and across the defendants' land. The defendants closed up the passages and increased the height of the 'al.'

Held, that, it having been established that, for a long series of years, the waters from the plaintiffs' lands had been accustomed to escape in a particular direction, and by certain separate passages across the defendants' land, the defendants could not do anything which would interfere with the plaintiffs' rights in this respect.

Notice of. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Landlord and tenant—Accretion—Arrears of rent. Suit for—Notice of enhancement. When land has accreted to a ryot's holding, the rent paid by the ryot may be enhanced in respect thereof under the provisions of cl. 3, s. 18 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869; and no suit for rent in respect of such accretion will lie unless a proper notice of enhancement has been previously given.

Rannidhee Manjee v. Parbutty Dasse followed.

BROJENDRA COOMAR BHOOMICK v. WOOPENDRA NARAIN SINGH ... VIII 706

Notice of enhancement—Suit for arrears of rent. The plaintiffs sued for the arrears of rent of the years 1284, 1285, and also for the arrears of rent of the year 1286, the latter at an enhanced rate. The notice of enhancement was not proved, and the defendant insisted that the suit should be dismissed.

Held, that though the notice of enhancement had not been proved, the plaintiffs were not thereby precluded from the arrears of rent at the old rate.

Co-sharers—Notice of enhancement—Parties. A and B were talukdars of a certain village, each having an eight annas share. A certain ryot held a jote within the village, in respect of which he paid his rent separately—eight annas to A and eight annas to B. A served a notice of enhancement on the ryot, but the notice was signed by A only, and it did not appear that the consent of B had been previously obtained. A afterwards instituted a suit for arrears of rent at the enhanced rate, making B a defendant to the suit. Held, that the notice of enhancement was sufficient to maintain a suit so framed.

Agreement not to appeal—Subsequent appeal. After a plaintiff had obtained a decree, and under it, in execution, arrested his judgment-debtor, the latter filed a petition in Court agreeing not to prefer any appeal against the judgment obtained by the plaintiff, and the judgment-creditor at the same time agreed to release the judgment-debtor from arrest, and to take payment of the sum decreed to him by instalments. An order was passed by the Court embodying this arrangement.

The judgment-debtor, in contravention of this arrangement, preferred an appeal,—held, that the judgment-debtor having induced the decree-holder to believe, and having expressly undertaken that he would not prefer an appeal, and having by the representation and undertaking procured his own release from arrest, was estopped from acting contrary to his deliberate representation and undertaking.

Evidence Act, s. 115—Sale in execution of decree—Intervenor in Rent Suit. A purchase by a mortgagee, at a sale in execution of a decree upon his mortgage of the right, title, and interest of the mortgagor, who has been estopped from asserting a title to the property as against certain parties, does not place such mortgagee in a better position as regards the estoppel. A suit for rent by a zamindar and patnidar against a darpatnidar, was defeated by the defence of the latter that he had conveyed his interest to others, against whom the former afterwards obtained a decree, and brought the darpatni to sale in execution, buying their right, title, and interest therein himself. From the darpatnidar, who had thus disclaimed title, a third party claimed to be mortgagee, and set up a decree on his mortgage followed by a purchase of the tenure at a sale in execution. He was thereupon allowed to intervene in a suit for rent brought by the zamindar and patnidar against an ijaradar of lands within the darpatni estate. Held, that, notwithstanding this purchase, the intervening mortgagee was bound by the estoppel arising out of the mortgagor's disclaimer of title in the suit above-mentioned.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872). ss. 119, 323—Statements of witnesses to a Police Officer during an investigation—Refreshing memory—Medical witnesses, Evidence of—Opinion of experts how elicited—Examining at Sessions trial medical witness who has been examined before the Magistrate—Post-mortem examination reports. In giving evidence a Police Officer may refresh his memory by referring to documents in which he has, under s. 119 of Act X of 1872, reduced into writing statements of persons examined by him during an investigation, but the documents themselves cannot be used as evidence, and a Judge should not read such documents to a jury in order to point out discrepancies between the evidence and previous statements of the witnesses. The evidence of a medical man who has seen, and has made a post-mortem examination of the corpse of the person touching whose death the inquiry is, is admissible, firstly, to prove the nature of injuries which he observed; and, secondly, as evidence of the opinion of an expert as to the manner in which those injuries were inflicted and as to the cause of death. A medical man who has not seen the corpse is only in a position to give evidence of his opinion as an expert. The proper mode of eliciting such evidence is to put to the witness hypothetically the facts which the evidence of the other witnesses attempts to prove, and to ask the witness's opinion on those facts. Section 323 of Act X of 1872 does not in any way preclude the Judge at a Sessions trial from calling and examining the medical witness who has been examined before the Magistrate, and in every case in which the deposition taken by the Magistrate is essentially deficient or requires further elucidation, such witness should be called and examined by the Sessions Judge. A medical man in giving evidence may refresh his memory by referring to a report which he has made of his post-mortem examination, but the report itself cannot be treated as evidence, and no facts can be taken therefrom.

ROGHUNI SINGH v. THE EMPRESS ... IX 455

Local investigation—Judgment on facts observed by Judge but not proved. In a suit respecting boundaries, the Munsiff, before settling the issues in the case, visited the locality, and in his judgment relied upon certain facts which had come under his observation during his visit. These facts were not proved by any evidence, and the Munsiff did not make any report as to them. The District Judge reversed the Munsiff's decision on the oral evidence given in the case, holding that he could not take notice of the facts observed by the Munsiff himself, and on which he had based his judgment. Held, that though the result of the inquiry instituted by the Munsiff was not evidence according to the definition in Evidence Act, it was a matter before the Court which might have been taken into consideration. Held, also, that the Munsiff should have put the result of his investigation upon paper.

Commission—Documentary evidence, objection to admissibility of—Evidence taken by Commissioner beyond jurisdiction—Notice to produce original document—Refusal to produce—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 63, sub-section 3, 65, 66. If, when evidence is taken before Commissioners, a document is tendered and objected to on any ground, the opposite party is not precluded from objecting to the document at the trial on any other ground. It is not necessary to state all the objections to the admissibility of a document when it is first tendered, but the party objecting is at liberty to take any fresh objection whenever the party producing the document tenders it in evidence.

Where a commission to take evidence is issued to any place beyond the jurisdiction of the Court issuing the commission, it is not necessary, in order to admit secondary evidence of the contents of a document, that the party tendering it should have given notice to produce the original, nor is it necessary for him to prove a refusal to produce the original.

Under the old practice of Mofussil Courts, it was the duty of the Court to enter in the decree an abstract

Evidence contradicting document—Mortgage—Conditional sale. It does not necessarily follow from s. 92 of the Evidence Act that subsequent conduct and surrounding circumstances may not be given in evidence for the purpose of showing that what on the face of it is a conveyance is really a mortgage. This rule turns on the fraud which is involved in the conduct of the person who is really a mortgagee, and who sets himself up as an absolute purchaser, and the rule of admitting evidence for the purpose of defeating this fraud would not apply to an innocent purchaser without notice of the existence of the mortgage, who merely bought from a person who was in possession of title deeds and was the ostensible owner of the property.

Land Registration Act (Beng. Act VII of 1876), s. 55—Entry in register, effect of—Question of possession. Entries made under Beng. Act VII of 1876 by the Collector recording the names of proprietors of revenue-paying estates are not evidence under s. 35 of the Evidence Act of the fact of proprietorship. That section relates to the class of cases where a public officer has to enter in a register or other book, some actual fact which is known to him, e.g., the fact of a death or a marriage. The entry by the Collector in the register under Beng. Act VII of 1876 is not, properly speaking, the entry of a fact. It is a statement that the person is entitled to the property; it is the record of a right, not of a fact. Per GARTH, C.J.—Semb, that s. 55 of Beng. Act VII of 1876 constitutes the Collector a competent Court under particular circumstances for determining as between two disputants the question of possession, and his recorded decision upon that question in the register might be evidence of the fact of possession as between those two parties. *Ram Bushan Mahto v. Decree in mortgage—Sale in execution of decree—Property in different districts—Jurisdiction—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 19. A suit was instituted on a mortgage of a single revenue-paying estate in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the District of Backergunge, under the provisions of s. 19, Act X of 1877, and a decree was obtained for the sale of the mortgaged property. Decree payable by instalments—Instalments—Construction of decree—Limitation.

A consent decree for Rs. 350 directed payment of the money by fourteen half-yearly instalments of Rs. 25 each, in Cheyt and Assin of each year, the first instalment to be paid in the month of Cheyt 1283 (March-April 1877). The decree contained a provision that in default of payment of any one instalment, the execution-creditor should have the option of executing the decree for the whole amount remaining unpaid. Default was made in payment of the first instalment, but the judgment-debtor paid up (not on due date) the instalment which fell due up to, and including Assin 1285 (October-November 1878), when he stopped making any payments. On the 26th of November 1881 the decree-holder applied for execution in respect of all sums then remaining unpaid under the decree. The District Judge allowed execution to issue for all sums which had fallen due within three years previously to the date of the application for execution, but refused to allow execution to issue in respect of the instalments not then due. Held, that the execution-creditor must be considered to have waived his right to execute the decree for the whole amount, but was entitled under the decree to realize any instalments which were still due.

Joint decree—Payment out of Court to one of several joint judgment-creditors—Part satisfaction certified to the Court—Application for execution of full amount of decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 231, 244, 258. On an application for execution for the full amount due under a decree by some of several joint decree-holders, the judgment-debtor objected to execution being granted for the full amount of the decree on the ground that he had already paid off a large portion of the money due under the decree to B. one of the joint decree-holders. The payment was made out of Court, but B, who claimed to be entitled to a 12½ annas share in the decree, certified the payment in the manner prescribed by s. 258 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), and represented that his claim had been satisfied in full. The other joint decree-holders denied B's right to the 12½ annas share claimed by him, and refused to recognise the payment said to have been made to him. The lower Court disallowed the objection, and granted execution for the full amount of the decree. Held that, regard being had to the provisions of the General Clauses Act (Act I of 1868) the word "decree-holder" in s. 258 of Act XIV of 1882 should be read in the plural, and looking at the provisions of s. 231 of the latter Act, the Court ought not to recognise payments made out of Court, unless made and certified for the benefit of all the joint decree-holders of any portion of the decree in excess of that to which the decree-holder so paid is undisputedly entitled. Held, also, that a judgment-debtor is entitled to credit for any sum paid bona fide to one of several joint decree-holders, and duly certified to the Court by the latter, and that the other joint decree-holders cannot execute the decree for more than their own share. Held, further, that in this case the lower Court was wrong in wholly ignoring the payment certified by the decree-holder B, and that it should have determined, first, whether the payment to B was a fraud on the other joint decree-holders; and, secondly, what amount the latter were entitled to have out of the whole decree, the latter being the main question between the applicants for execution and the judgment-debtor, and as such clearly within the scope of s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code. Ranee Nyma Koor v. Doolee Chund; Brojeswari Chowdhraee v. Tripoora Sounderey Debi; and Mahima Chandra Roy v. Pyari Mohan Chowdhry.

TARRUCK CHUNDER BHUTTACHARJEE v. DIVENDRO NATH SANYAL ... IX 831

Mode of execution—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 235 and 260—Special appeal, power of High Court in. Upon an application under s. 235 of Act X of 1877 (Civil Procedure Code) for the execution of a decree, which directed the judgment-debtor, forthwith to pull down and remove such portion of a wall as had been erected by him upon the wall of the decree-holder, the mode in which the assistance of the Court was required to be given was stated in column (j) of such application to be by giving the decree-holder possession of his wall by pulling down the wall erected thereon. The Court directed an order to issue to the Nazir to remove the judgment-debtor's wall from the top of the decree-holder's wall.

Held, that the decree-holder's application could not be granted in that form, and that he should have asked the assistance of the Court to be given in the way provided for by s. 260 of Act X 1877, by the imprisonment of the judgment-debtor, or the attachment of his property, or both.

Held also, that the Court was wrong in passing the order it had, but that it should have pointed out to the decree-holder the manner in which he should have asked the assistance of the Court to be given and the remedy to which he was entitled; and that, upon such amended application being made, the proper course to pursue was to serve a notice on the judgment-debtor, directing him to comply with the order contained in the decree within a time to be fixed by such notice; and that if he failed to comply with such order within the time so limited, the Court might then, at the instance of the decree-holder, make an order, either for the judgment-debtor's imprisonment, or for the attachment of his property, due regard being had to the provisions of s. 260 in the latter case.

Execution of Decree—(concluded.)

Held further, that the High Court, in special appeal, should not vary the order for execution which had been passed in such a way as to give the decree-holder that relief for which he did not ask.

Order in. See APPEAL.

Order staying. See LIMITATION ACT, 1877, SCHED. II, ART. 179.

Suit to stay execution against certain property, until judgment-creditor had proceeded against other property—Cause of action—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 244, cl. (c)—Part satisfaction—Suit for land—Jurisdiction—Letters Patent, cl 12. One Khelut Chunder was entitled to a share in Pargana Alumpore; before he obtained possession, Government revenue on the whole estate fell due. Khelut failed to pay his share, and his co-sharer, Kaminee, to save the estate, paid the whole sum due, and subsequently sued Khelut for the amount, eventually obtaining a decree. Subsequently this decree became vested in one Rutnessur, and the Pargana Alumpore came into the possession of one Kaliprosono Ghose. Rutnessur obtained an order for execution against the property of Khelut, and having transferred his decree to the High Court, proceeded to enforce the decree against Kristo Mohinee, the widow of Khelut, and her son, by attaching the family dwelling-house in Calcutta. The widow and son then brought this suit against Kaliprosono to have the share of Khelut in Alumpore ascertained, and praying for a decree calling upon Kaliprosono to pay the amount of the value of the share of Alumpore in satisfaction of Rutnessur's decree.

Held, that the suit could not be maintained so far as it attempted to make the decree a charge against Alumpore.

Questions as to part satisfaction of a decree cannot, according to cl. (c) s. 244 of Act X of 1877, be raised in a separate suit. That section alludes to parties to the decree or their representatives; but it is not on that account open to a plaintiff to evade the section by adding an unnecessary party to the suit.

Held on appeal, that the suit was rightly dismissed; that, as far as Rutnessur was concerned, it had already been decided that Rutnessur was entitled, if he so chose, to execute his decree against the Calcutta property; and that, therefore, that question was res judicata; and that, as regards the plaintiff's claim that the patni given by Kaliprosono to Hurry Churn should be treated as part-payment to Rutnessur, such a question could only be decided in execution-proceedings.

That the mere existence of the agreement between Kaliprosono, Rutnessur, and Hurry Churn did not entitle the plaintiff to join them as co-defendants in the suit. That, as far as Kaliprosono was concerned, the suit brought against him could only be treated as a suit to establish a charge or lien on land out of Calcutta, and therefore the Court had no jurisdiction to try it.

KRISTO MOHINEE DOSSEE v. KALIPROSONO GHOSE ... VIII 402

Transfer of decree for execution—Order passed in Court to which proceedings are transferred—Appeal irregularly brought after time has been granted to apply to Original Court. Under s. 239 of Act X of 1877, a Court to which a decree has been transferred may refer the objector to the Court which passed the decree.

Certain objections were taken in an execution-proceeding, and the Judge before whom the objections were heard passed an order disposing of the objections save as to two, which he decided he had no jurisdiction to entertain. The objector then made a special application to the judge to obtain time to make an application with reference to these objections to the Court from which the decree had been transferred, and accordingly time was granted him to do so; but, instead of applying, the objector preferred an appeal to the High Court against the order of the Judge disposing of the objections. The High Court, on hearing the appeal, made the appellant pay the costs of the appeal, disapproving strongly of the course taken by the objector.

Forgery and abetment—Using forged document—Penal Code, s. 471—Intention to defraud—Inference of fraud. Where a person, in the course of an action brought against him to gain possession of a property, uses a forged document for the purpose of supporting his title, though there may be no necessity for the use of it, such a user is clearly fraudulent. A general intention to defraud, without the intention of causing wrongful gain to one person or wrongful loss to another, would, if proved, be sufficient to support a conviction: and such an intention is a necessary inference which the jury should be directed to draw, if they are satisfied that the accused has uttered a forged document as a true one, meaning it to be taken as such, and knowing it to be forged.

IN THE MATTER OF DHUNUM KAZEE ... IX 53
Misrepresentation—Kabuliat—Contract of tenancy. Three plots of land were let to A under one kabuliat. A relinquished two plots, but admitted to being in possession of one, alleging that the kabuliat had been obtained by fraud and misrepresentation.

Held, that as the lease was an entire contract, one portion only could not be repudiated on the ground of fraud: but that, if the tenancy was to be avoided on the ground of fraud, it must be avoided in toto.

*Adoption—Termination of authority to adopt—Succession of adopted son to collaterals in gotra not that of father by adoption.* An instrument of permission (anumati patra) to a Hindu wife to adopt should she be left a widow, provided that "dattaka (adopted) son shall be entitled to perform your and my shraddh and that of our ancestors, and to succeed to the property." The husband and wife had a son born, who survived his father, succeeded to the property, and died before his mother, leaving a widow, who, as heir, took possession of it for her widow's estate. The mother then professed to exercise the above power, and in the suit arising thereupon—Mussamut Bhoobunmoyee Debia v. Ramkishore Acharj Chowdhry—It was decided that the son's widow, having acquired a vested interest, a new heir could not be so substituted for her.

Held, that although such a substitution might have been disallowed without the adoption being held invalid for all other purposes, the above decision had determined that, upon the vesting of the estate in the widow, the power of adoption was incapable of execution, and was at an end; and that this would have been the conclusion if the question of the validity of the power had been raised without any previous decision upon it.

An adopted son occupies the same position in the family of the adopter as natural-born son, except in a few instances, which are accurately defined both in the

Dattaka Chandrika and Dattaka Mimansa, governing authorities in the Bengal school.

An adopted son succeeds not only lineally, but collaterally to the inheritance of his relations by adoption.

Sumbhoochunder Chowdhry v. Naraini Dibeh referred to and followed.

Held in this case, that the adopted son of the maternal grandfather of the deceased, though the gotra into which he was adopted was not the same as the latter's, was an heir nearer to him than such maternal grandfather's grandnephew.

PADMAKUMARI DEBI CHOWDHURI v. THE COURT OF WARDS ... VIII 302

Adoption—Simultaneous adoption. A simultaneous adoption is not valid according to Hindu Law. The adoption of one son alone is actually and in itself wholly sufficient to satisfy the purpose of the law; the adoption of two is not within the scope of the power of adoption, and where such a thing is attempted, neither of the children is the legally adopted son of the deceased, although the ceremonies of adoption may have been performed as regards each and also at the same time.

GYANENDRO CHUNDER LAHIRI v. KALLA PAHAR HAJEE ... IX 50

Alienation—See Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 283.

Alienation by father—Mitakshara—Joint family—Sale in execution of money-decree against father of Mitakshara family. The mere fact of a decree being passed against the father only of a joint family governed by the Mitakshara law will not lead necessarily to the conclusion that what was sold in execution of that decree is only the father's interest in the joint family property. Notwithstanding the decree being against the father only under certain circumstances, there may be a valid sale of a joint property belonging to the family in execution thereof. In execution of two money-decrees against A alone, the right, title and interest of A in certain joint family property was sold, and the entire share of the joint family was taken possession of by the auction-purchasers. In a suit by the minor son and the wife of A, who with A constituted a joint family governed by the Mitakshara law to recover possession of their shares in the property sold, held that, although the plaintiffs were not parties to the decrees, in execution of which the sales took place, the mere fact of A being sued alone was not sufficient to justify the finding that only his right, title and interest passed under the sales, and that as the facts of the case showed that the decrees were passed with reference to transactions which clearly concerned the joint family, the whole of the share of the joint family in the properties sold passed to the auction-purchaser, the plaintiffs having failed to show that the debts, which were the foundation of the decrees in execution of which the sales were held, were contracted for immoral purposes.

SHEO PROSHAD v. JUNG BAHADOOR ... IX 389

Alienation—Joint family property—Mitakshara—Decree against the father of a joint family for lawful debts—Sale of the whole joint estate in execution of decree against one co-sharer. A, a judgment-creditor, having obtained a decree against B, the father of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law, in a suit to which the sons of B were not parties, but in which it was proved that the debt had been incurred for lawful purposes, proceeded to execute his decree by attaching and selling the joint family property. Thereupon the sons came in and objected to their interest in the property being sold in execution of a decree in a suit to which they were not parties, and, on their objection being disallowed, filed a suit against A and B to have it declared that their interest in the property was not liable to be sold to satisfy the decree. Held, that the debt in respect of which the decree had been passed having been contracted for lawful purposes, the judgment-creditor was entitled to execute his decree against the whole of the joint family property.

Held also, that the ruling in the case of Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh had no application to the facts of this case.

RAMDUT SING v. MAHENDER PRASAD ... IX 452

Alienation—Mitakshara law—Ancestral property—Right of mortgagee to sell. A Hindu, governed by the Mitakshara law, mortgaged certain property to the plaintiffs. In a suit to recover the money due under the mortgage, and for a sale of the property, brought against the mortgagor, his four sons, and the purchaser of the mortgagor's right and interest at an execution-sale, the lower Court gave the plaintiffs a decree against the mortgagor alone, holding that no necessity for the loan had been proved; but did not decide whether the property was the self-acquired property of the mortgagor or ancestral property. The High Court remanded the case for the trial of an issue upon this point. The lower Court found that the property was ancestral, and affirmed the original decree.

Held, that, assuming the property in dispute was ancestral, and that the mortgage was not valid against the sons, the plaintiffs were still entitled to recover the debt by the sale of the property of the father and the sons, because, supposing that the debt was contracted for personal purposes of the father, still the ancestral property in the hands of the sons was liable for the debt, it being not proved to have been contracted for immoral purposes.

Lachmun Dass v. Giridhar Choudhry followed.

GUNGA PRASAD v. AJUDHIA PERSHAD SINGH VIII 131

Alienation—Mitakshara Law—Mortgage by sons of an insane person—Sale in execution of decree—Suit by commissioner to recover possession—Purchaser, Rights of. Although a coparcener in a Mitakshara family has a right (in a suit properly framed for that purpose) to recover the whole property from an execution-purchaser, subject to the right of the latter to have the share and interest of the debtor ascertained by partition, yet this rule will not be applicable where the suit is brought by a person who has become insane subsequent to his birth, inasmuch as no decree could be passed in his favour which could contemplate a partition between himself and the purchaser of the interest of his coparceners.

RAM SAHYE BILUKKUT v. LALLA LALJI SAHYE VIII 149

Alienation—Mitakshara—Joint family trade—Alienation of ancestral property by some of the members of the family—Interest of adult son affected by sale in execution of a decree against his father—Parties to suit. A family, governed by Mitakshara law, carrying on trade in the names of some of its members, having become indebted to the defendants in a large amount in respect of advances made for the purposes of the trade, some of the head members of the family executed a bond in favour of the defendants for the amount due, and hypothecated certain family properties which stood in their names as collateral security therefor. The amount not having been paid on the due date, the defendants brought a suit on the bond against the persons who had executed it, and obtained a decree which, however, did not direct that the properties hypothecated should be sold. In execution of that decree the interest of the judgment-debtors in the hypothecated properties, and in other family properties, were sold, and were purchased by the defendants, who, subsequently, under their purchase, obtained possession of the shares of the judgment-debtors and of those of their sons. The decree not having been satisfied by those sales, the defendants brought a suit against the remaining head members of the family to have it declared that their interests in the family properties were liable to satisfy the decree, and that suit also was decreed. Under the last decree the interests in the family properties of the judgment-debtors under that decree were sold, and were purchased by the defendants who subsequently obtained possession of the shares of those judgment-debtors and of the shares of their sons. Some of the sons of the judgment-debtors in both decrees were adult at the time when the suits were instituted. In suits brought, many years after the sales, by members of the family who had not been parties to the previous suits, to recover their shares in the family properties, held, that the interests of all the members of the family had passed on the sales. Per MITTER, J.—There is no distinction in principle between the case of an adult son and that of a minor son as regards a son's interest in ancestral property being liable to pass on a sale of such property in execution of a decree against his father only; but if an adult son proves that he would have been able to save the property by paying off the debt out of his private funds, if he had been a party to the suit, quære, whether he should not be allowed to have the sale set aside on payment of the debt due under the decree. A son's interest may pass on a sale of ancestral property in execution of a money-decree against his father, but whether it does or does not pass will have to be determined by the circumstances of each case. Delay in bringing proceedings to impeach sales is a matter for consideration in determining what interests pass on the sale.

BASO KOOR v. HURRY DASS IX 495

Alienation—Mitakshara Law—Ancestral property—Sale of joint family property—Debts legally contracted by father—Sale in execution of decree. There is no foundation either in the Mitakshara law itself, or in any decisions passed by the Judicial Committee, for the broad proposition that in all cases under a sale in execution of a money-decree against the father in a joint family, consisting of a father and sons, whether adults or minors, nothing but the father's share passes.

The result of an examination of the leading cases on the subject is, that, in each such case, the question as to what was sold in execution must be first determined (the mere circumstance that a decree was obtained against the father alone is not conclusive upon the point); and it should further be enquired whether the father was sued in his representative capacity or not, and if not so sued, then whether the sons are entitled to set aside the sale quid their shares.

The decision of the Privy Council in Deen Dayal Lall v. Jugdeep Narain Singh in no way conflicts with the principle laid down in the case of Muddun Thakoor v. Kanto Lall.

UMBICA PROSAD TEWARY v. RAM SAHAY LALL. ... VIII 898

Alienation—Mitakshara Law—Ancestral property—Sale or mortgage of joint family property—suit by son to recover possession of share—Limitation—Parties—Right of purchaser at execution-sale. A suit by a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara law, to recover possession of property sold during his minority by his father, is within time if brought within three years after he attains the age of twenty-one.

A father governed by the Mitakshara law may alienate the family property to discharge debts incurred by him for purposes not illegal or immoral. If the son seeks to set aside such alienation as to his own interest, he will have to show that the purposes of the alienation were illegal or immoral.

If the son, being adult, has joined in the conveyance, or led the alienee by his conduct to suppose that he assented to the alienation, he will be estopped from disputing its validity. These propositions apply to a mortgage, so as to place the purchaser at an execution-sale under a decree upon the mortgage-bond in the position of an alienee by private sale.

If the son has been a party to the suit in which the decree upon the mortgage-bond was obtained, he is concluded; but if he has not been a party to the suit, he is not concluded, but must show that the original debt was contracted for illegal or immoral purposes, in order to recover his share of the property from the purchaser. Where the father has neither aliened nor mortgaged the family property, but it is sought by suit to make that property liable to satisfy a debt incurred by the father, the son, as well as the father, must be a party to the suit.

When the creditor sues the father alone for a debt contracted by him alone, and in execution sells the right, title and interest of the father only, the purchaser at this sale does not take the son's interest.

Contract—Debtor and creditor—Dandupat—Interest in excess of principal. Since the passing of Act XXVIII of 1855, a Hindu creditor may claim from his Hindu debtor interest in excess of the principal sum lent, should such interest have accrued. The rule of law prohibiting the recovery of interest in excess of the principal sum lent was in force in the Mofussil of Bengal not as a provision of Hindu law, but as a statutory rule introduced by Regulation XV of 1793, and embracing all persons contracting in the mofussil.

HET NARAIN SINGH v. RAM DEIN SINGH. ... IX 871

Custom—Alienation of impartible estate—Succession to raj. Impartibility of an inheritance does not, as a matter of law, render it inalienable.

The owner of an estate which descends as an impartible inheritance is not, by reason of its impartibility, restricted to making grants or gifts during only for his own life. The power of alienation resting upon the general law, inalienability, if existing, must depend upon family custom in this respect, and of such custom proof is required.

Anund Lal Singh Deo v. Maharaj Dheraj Guna Narain Deo followed.

In the case of a titular raj, of which the lately deceased Raja had made a mokurari patta, or grant in perpetuity, of part of the zamindari lands thereto belonging, in favour of a younger son, it was found, that the only custom proved was, that the raj estate descended to the eldest son to the exclusion of the other sons, and that there was no proof of a custom prohibiting such an alienation as that made by the grant.

Held, that the mokurari grant was not invalidated by reason of the raj estate being by custom impartible.

RAJA UDAYA ADITYA DEB v. JADAB LAL ADITYA DEB ... VIII 199

Endowment—Succession to the management of a religious endowment, as sebit—Usage of the institution. On a claim to succeed to the management, as sebit, of a religious institution endowed with property, it was contended that in the absence of prescribed rule, or of established usage, succession took place according to the ordinary rules of the Hindu law of inheritance, where the sebit led a family life. Held that, where owing to the absence of documentary or other direct evidence, it does not appear what rule of succession has been laid down by the endower, it must be proved by evidence what is the usage. In the present instance the usage did not support the claim; and, upon the evidence, the claimant, who was out of possession, failed to make a title.

JANOKI DEBI v. GOPAL ACHARJIA GOSWAMI ... IX 766

Gift—Husband and wife—Immoveable property. It is not necessary in Hindu law, in order that a wife should take an absolute estate in immoveable property under a deed of gift from her husband, that the gift should be made with such words of limitation as are ordinarily used to convey an estate of inheritance. The intention of the husband may be expressed in other ways, and is a matter of construction merely. Koonj Behary Dutt v. Prem Chand Dutt, distinguished.

RAM NARAIN SING v. PEARAY BHUGUT ... IX 830

Gift—Possession retained by donor—Transfer of possession—Symbolical transfer. A gift by a Hindu, unaccompanied either by possession on the part of the donee or any symbolical act, such as handing over documents of title, or permitting the donee to receive rents, is not in itself a valid transaction, even though the deed of gift be registered.

DAGAI DABEE v. MOTHURA NATH CHATTOPADHYA ... IX 854

Inheritance—Bengal school of Hindu law—Sapinda—Brother's daughter's son. According to the Bengal School of Hindu law a brother's daughter's son is a sapinda, and is, therefore, a preferable heir to the great-great-great-grandfather's great-great-great-grandson.

DIGUMBER ROY CHOWDHRY v. MOTI LAL BUNDOPADHYA ... IX 563

Inheritance—Bengal school—Oblations, offering of. According to the Bengal school of law, inheritance goes to him who offers oblations to the deceased, or to ancestors of the deceased, in which oblation the deceased would participate. Where more than one person offers such oblations, succession goes to him who offers oblations to the father of the deceased, and an heir who offers such an oblation, will be preferred to an heir who offers oblations to the grandfather and great grandfather of the deceased.

PRAN NATH SURMA JOWARDAR v. SURRUT CHUNDRA BHUTTACHARJEE VIII 460

Inheritance—Descent of lands purchased by widow out of income of life estate. Land purchased by a Hindu widow with money derived from the income of her life-estate passes, when undisposed of by her, to the heirs of her husband as an increment to the estate, and not to her heirs as property over which she had absolute control.

ANUND CHUNDRA MUNDUL v. NILMONY JOURDAR ... IX 758

Inheritance—Exclusion from inheritance—Insanity—Partition. It is not necessary that madness or insanity should be congenital to disqualify a person from inheritance; a coparcener, therefore, who has become insane whilst in possession will lose his share on partition.

RAM SAHYE BHUKKUT v. LALLA LALJI SAHYE ... VIII 149

Inheritance—Mitakshara family—Suit by lunatic father to recover family property—Disability to sue. A lunatic, a member of a joint Mitakshara family, cannot sue to recover property belonging to the joint family, he being, under the Mitakshara law, disqualified from inheritance, and therefore entitled to no share or partition in the property, but only to maintenance.

RAM SOONDER ROY v. RAM SAHYE BHUGUT ... VIII 919

Inheritance—Mitakshara—Daughter-in-law. Under the Mitakshara and usages obtainin in the district of Behar a daughter-in-law, whose husband has predeceased his father, is not in the line of heirs of her father-in-law. Per MITTER, J.—A daughter-in-law, not being a joint owner with her father-in-law, cannot after his death take his estate by right of survivorship.

ANANDA BIBEE v. NOWNIT LAL ... IX 315

Inheritance—Mitakshara—Sister—Male gotraja sapindas—Stridhan. According to the Mitakshara law a sister is not in the line of heirs, and is not entitled to succeed in preference to male gotraja sapindas. Nor does an estate inherited by a female become her stridhan. Such estate on her death goes to the heirs of the last male heir, and not to the heir of her separate property.

JULLESSUR KOOR v. UGGUR ROY ... IX 725

Inheritance—Succession by daughter before her marriage—Subsequent marriage and birth of son—Death of such daughter—Succession of married sister. On the death of a daughter, who had succeeded before her marriage to her father's estate, to the exclusion of her married sister, the estate so inherited by her devolves upon her married sister, who has, or is likely to have, male issue, and not upon her own son.

TINUMONI DAS v. NIBARUN CHUNDER GUPTA ... IX 154

SURJOKANT NUNDI v. MOHESH CHUNDER DUTT ... IX 70

Joint family—Joint property, suit to recover—Onus probandi—Limitation Act, 1877, Arts. 127, 144. The plaintiff sued for a share in certain property on the allegation that his ancestor K and the defendants' ancestor R were uterine brothers who, while they were living in commensality, purchased the property in question with their joint funds in the name of R; and that subsequently K left his home, and then his daughter, the plaintiff's mother, enjoyed the property jointly with R until her death, when the plaintiff succeeded to his right and interest applied to have his name registered as a joint proprietor, but his application was refused; hence this suit. The defence was that R bought the property in question with his own funds after he and his brother K had separated; that Radha Mohun, and afterwards the defendants, had been in exclusive possession for more than twelve years; and that the suit was barred by limitation. Held (reversing the judgment of FIELD, J.) that the onus was on the plaintiff to prove that the property was joint property. Before a plaintiff can bring his case within Art. 127 of schedule II of the Limitation Act, 1877, it is incumbent on him to show that the property in which he seeks to recover a share is "joint property."

Partition—Bengal school of Hindu law—Widow's estate—Joint widows—Alienation—Purchaser from Hindu widow. Where a Hindu governed by the Bengal school of Hindu law dies intestate leaving two widows his only heirs him surviving, either of those widows may sell her interest in her deceased husband's property, and the purchaser thereof is entitled to enforce a partition as against the other widow. The partition, if decreed, should be effected in such a way as would not be detrimental to the future interests of the reversioners.

Partition—Mitakshara law—Share of grandmother—Self-acquired property of father on partition. Under the Mitakshara law, a grandmother, on partition, is entitled to a share in the joint family property.

Semble.—The rule of law, to be found in the 2nd Vol. of Vyavastha Chandrika, pp. 356-359, which lays down that, when the father makes the partition of his own choice, his mother is not entitled to a share, is intended to apply only to the self-acquired property of the father.

BEPIN BEHARI BUNDOPADHYA v. BROJO NATH MOOKHOPADHYA ... VIII 357

Will, construction of—Gift ineffectual so far as it departs from the law of inheritance—Gift over of accrued share. A gift by will, attempting to exclude the legal course of inheritance, is only effectual, in favour of such person as can take, to the extent to which the will is consistent with the Hindu law. And it is a distinct departure from that law to restrict the order of succession to males excluding females.

A testator gave by his will to three sons of his brother certain estates "for payment of the expenses of their pious acts." He also directed as follows: "The said three nephews shall hold possession of the above in equal shares, and shall pay the Government revenue of the same into the Collectorate. They shall have no right to alienate the same by gift or sale, but they, their sons, grandsons, and their descendants in the male line shall enjoy the same, and shall perform acts of piety as they respectively shall think fit for the spiritual welfare of our ancestors. If any die without leaving a male child, which God forbid, then his share shall devolve on the surviving nephews, and their male descendants, and not on their other heirs."

In a suit between the survivor of the three nephews and the testator's heir, held, that the attempt to alter the legal course of inheritance failed, and that the estate taken under the above clause was only for life.

The gift over of a life estate was competent; it being to persons alive, and capable of taking on the death of the testator, and to take effect on the death of a person or persons then alive.

On the death of one brother his share went to the two other brothers, and on the death of one of the latter his augmented share, made up of his original and accrued share, went to the survivor.

TAROKESSUR ROY v. SOSHI SHIKHURESSUR ROY. SOSHI SHIKHURESSUR ROY v. TAROKESSUR ROY ... IX 952

Will—Gift to grandsons after death of annuitants—Vesting, postponement of—Inconsistent declarations rejected. A testator, after charging certain annuities and other payments on his estate, gave the whole of his property to his grandsons in these words:—"I give the whole of my property to my grandsons; but until those portions of the said property and the monthly stipends which I have given to some to enjoy for the natural term of their lives shall revert to the estate after their deaths, my estate shall not be divided amongst any of my grandsons or my great-grandsons. After all the pensioners have died, and after the enjoyment of the said pensions and property shall have ceased, the executor's powers shall be annulled, and then my grandsons and my grandson's heirs—that is to say, my great-grandsons,—shall be able to divide the whole of the property and take their father's shares."

He further directed that, for five years after his death, his family should remain joint, and allowed to his executors Rs. 100 for family expenses.

Held, that the will contained sufficiently direct words of present gift to the grandsons, and that the clause in which it was attempted to postpone the enjoyment in possession, and other clauses which directed accumulation, must be rejected or disregarded as inconsistent or repugnant.

Held also, that the fact that the estate was subject to partial trusts or charges did not postpone the vesting in possession; nor would it, even according to English law, let in grandsons of the testator born after his death during the continuance of the trusts.

CALLY NATH NAUGH CHOWDHRY v. CHUNDER NATH NAUGH CHOWDHRY VIII 378

Will—Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870), ss. 2, 3, and 6—Succession Act (X of 1865), ss. 98, 99, and 101—Gift to unborn persons—Remoteness, gift void for. A Hindu testator, by his will made in 1872, provided, that should he never have a son, his daughters' sons, when they come to years of discretion, should receive certain properties in equal shares; and he directed that, if his daughters have no sons, or not be likely to have sons, then that such of his daughters as should reside in the ancestral family dwelling-house should receive a certain monthly allowance. The testator died in 1873, leaving only his daughters him surviving.

Held, that the will being governed by the Hindu Wills Act, the bequest to the daughters' sons was valid. The rule of construction laid down in Tague case does not apply to wills of Hindus made since the passing of Act XXI of 1871.

The words "create any interest," in the last proviso to s. 3 of the Hindu Wills Act, should be read as referring only to the estate or interest which can be given, without reference to the further question to whom it can be given.

ALANGAMONJORI DABEE v. SONAMONI DABEE ... VIII 157

A gift by will to persons unborn at the time of the death of the testator, whether made prior or subsequently to the passing of the Hindu Wills Act, is void.

The words "to create an interest," in the fifth proviso to s. 3 of the Hindu Wills Act, apply both to the quantity and quality of the interest created, and in their natural and ordinary meaning include the capacity of a donee to take.

Widow's estate—Conveyance by presumptive heir—Ratification by widow—Effect of witnessing deed on rights of witness—Reversioners—Evidence of consent. During the lifetime of a Hindu widow, her son, the then presumptive heir to the property of which she was in possession, conveyed it to purchasers by deeds to which she was not a party. Subsequently she by separate deed ratified the conveyances. This deed was witnessed by a more remote reversioner. The son died during the lifetime of his mother, and the witness to the deed of ratification became the next reversionary heir. Held, in a suit by him after the widow's death for possession, that at the time of the conveyances the son had a mere contingent reversionary interest in expectancy, and that the subsequent ratification by his mother could not operate as a surrender of her estate so as to change the conveyances, and make them enure as absolute conveyances, but could only amount to a conveyance of her interest. Held also, that the fact that the reversionary heir witnessed the deed of ratification, did not in itself amount to evidence of consent to it on his part.

Insolvency

After-acquired property—Purchaser from insolvent who had not obtained his discharge—Purchaser from Official Assignee—Rights of parties—Intervention of Official Assignee—Adverse Possession. Subject to the right and claim of the Official Assignee, and so long as he does not interfere, an insolvent, who has not obtained his final discharge, has power with respect to after-acquired property to buy and sell and give discharges, and do all other acts which he could have done before his insolvency.

The possession of such property by an insolvent in such a position may be adverse to the Official Assignee so as to bar the title of the latter by lapse of time.

of the Indian Insolvent Act, 11 and 12 Vict., c. 21. An application was made under ss. 59 and 60 of the Rent Law, Beng. Act VIII of 1869, for an order that the tenure should be sold for its own arrears. The Official Assignee objected to the sale, and contended that the decree-holder's only right was to prove in the insolvency for the amount of his debt. Held that, whether the arrears of rent became due before or after the insolvency of the judgment-debtor, the decree holder was entitled to sell the tenure in execution of his decree.

A mortgage-bond contained a proviso that in case of default in payment of the principal sum, with interest at the rate of one per cent. per mensem on a certain day, interest should be paid at the rate of 2 per cent. per mensem from the date of the bond. Held, that the stipulation to pay increased interest must be construed as a penal clause.

Jaghir—

Inclusion of Jaghir lands in area of settled Zamindari—Ghatwali tenure—Reg. XXIX of 1874—Liability to attachment and sale. In the area of a zamindari were included at the Permanent Settlement the mauzas which made up the mehal of a jaghir, the succession to which was subject to the sanction of Government, the jaghirdar being bound to render public services. One-third of the revenue assessed upon the jaghir mehal was retained by the jaghirdar, forming no part of the zamindari assets on which the jama of the latter was fixed. Held, that whether this jaghir was a ghatwali tenure or not, within the meaning of the term as applied in Reg. XXIX of 1814 (the zamindari being Pachit, adjoining, and at one time included in Birbhum) the jaghir was analogous to such tenure as described in the preamble to the Regulation. Held also, that the nature of the tenure had not been altered by the Permanent Settlement, after which the services due by the jaghirdar remained, as before, public services, and continued to be due to the Government. That the zamindar became entitled only to the rent, or revenue, which was previously due to the Government, and in respect of which he was assessed, and did not become entitled to the services in respect whereof the one-third of the rent or revenue was allowed as compensation to the jaghirdar. That the jaghir, though hereditary, was not subject to the ordinary rules of inheritance according to the Hindu or the Mahomedan law, but was held upon the condition of approval of the heir by the Government. Thus were precluded both division of jaghir mehal upon the death of the holder, and alienation during his life. It followed that the jaghir mehal was not liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree against the father and predecessor in estate of a jaghirdar, so approved, as assets by descent in the possession of the latter. *Raja Lelanund Singh v. The prisoners, residents of the district of Singhbhum, a district in British India, were convicted, under s. 331 of the Penal Code, at Singhbhum, of an offence committed in Mohurbhunij.

Per GARTH, C.J., PONTIFEX and MORRIS, JJ.—The territory of Mohurbhunij is not within the limits of British India ; but, under the provisions of s. 9 of Act XXI of 1879, a conviction in British India for an offence committed without the limits of British India, is good.

Per MITTER, J.—Mohurbhunij is within the limits of British India ; but seeing that the Tributary mehals constitute a 'district' within the meaning of the Criminal Procedure Code, and that the Superintendent of these mehals has been vested with the powers of a Sessions Judge under an order of the Government of India, a conviction under the Penal Code (having regard to the provisions of s. 70 of the Criminal Procedure Code) ought not to be set aside.

Per PRINSEP, J.—Mohurbhunij is within the limits of British India ; but the Acts which extends to British India do not extend to Mohurbhunij. The territory having been expressly placed beyond the ordinary legislation, the law in force in British India cannot come into operation there until this exemption has been removed.

Rajah of Tipperah—Sovereign Prince—Suit against 'Sovereign Prince' with respect to land owned by him, and situate in British India—Maintenance—Charge on immoveable property—Benefits to arise out of land—General Clauses Consolidation Act (I of 1868), s. 2, cl. 5—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), Chap. XXVIII, s. 433. The Rajah of Hill Tipperah is a Sovereign Prince within the meaning of chapter XXVIII of Act X of 1877, and cannot be sued personally in the Courts of British India except under the conditions specified in s. 433 of that Act. The fact of a defendant not subject to the jurisdiction of a Court having waived his privilege in previous suits brought against him does not give the Court jurisdiction to entertain a suit against him in which he pleads that he is not subject to such jurisdiction. A suit for maintenance which seeks to have the maintenance made a charge on immoveable property is not a suit on immoveable property within the meaning of clause c, s. 433, Act X of 1877, nor is it a suit for "benefits to arise out of land" within the meaning of the definition of the words "immoveable property" contained in Act I of 1868, s. 2, cl. 5. A claim for maintenance is not a charge upon immoveable property. A member of the royal family of Hill Tipperah brought a suit against the Rajah to have it declared that with respect to certain land situate within British India, and forming portion of the possessions of the Rajah he was entitled to the post of jehoraj, and to succeed to such land on the death of the Rajah, and also claimed maintenance, and sought to have it declared that such maintenance should be a charge on the revenues of the lands situate in British India. Held, that the British Courts had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, it not being one for immoveable property.

Revenue Court—Act X of 1859, s. 23—Surety for payment of rent—Decree, form of. In a suit for arrears of rent in a Revenue Court under Act X of 1859, the lessors joined as defendants the lessee, and another person whom they alleged to be a surety for the payment of the rent. An ex parte decree was made in favour of the plaintiffs, but it did not expressly make the alleged surety liable for the money awarded. In execution of the decree certain of the alleged surety's land was sold, and the decree-holders were the purchasers at the sale. An application under Beng. Act VII of 1876 for the registration of their names as proprietors of the land purchased having been rejected, the decree-holders brought the present suit to establish their title to, and to recover possession of, the land. Held, that the plaintiff's title was bad on the ground that the decree did not purport to bind the surety for the payment of the money awarded, and on the ground that a Revenue Court is not competent to entertain a suit against a person who has become surety for payment of rent.

BHUGWAN CHUNDER ROY CHOWDRI v. MANICK BIBEE ... IX 383

There is nothing to prevent a Small Cause Court from determining whether a person, who has been made a co-plaintiff and claims as a co-parcener of the original plaintiff, has any right to the property sued for.

The decree in such a case, if given in favour of the plaintiffs, must order that the parties do recover possession of the property sued for in such shares as the Judge may consider them to be entitled.

Kidnapping—

Abetment—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 109, 363—Right to custody of children. A mother cannot have a right to the custody of her legitimate children adversely to the father. Ordinarily the custody of the mother is the custody of the father, and any removal of the children from place to place by the mother ought to be taken to be consistent with the right of the father as guardian, and not as a taking out of his keeping. But where a Hindu woman left her husband's house, taking with her her infant daughter, and went to the house of A, and on the same day the daughter was married to B, the brother of A, without the father's consent, it was held that A was rightly convicted under ss. 109 and 363 of the Penal Code of abetting the offence of kidnapping.

IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF PRANKRISHNA SURMA. THE EMPRESS v. PRANKRISHNA SURMA ... VIII 969

Guardianship of illegitimate child—Lawful guardian—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 361, 366. The mother of an illegitimate child is its proper and natural guardian during the period of nurture. And where the mother, on her death-bed, entrusts the care of such child to a person, who accepts the trust and maintains the child, such a person is "lawfully entrusted" with the care and custody of the minor within the meaning of s. 361 of the Penal Code.

The explanation of the words "lawful guardian" in s. 361 is intended to obviate the difficulty the prosecution might be put to in being bound to prove strictly, in cases of abduction, that the person from whose care the minor had been abducted was the guardian of such minor within the meaning of the legal acceptance of the word.

Kistibandi—

Agreeing to pay off a debt due under a decree by instalments—Account stated—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sched. ii, art. 64. A, being the holder of a decree against B, B, on the 7th July 1875, entered into a kistibandi and filed it in Court, setting out that he would pay off the debt due under the decree by certain instalments, and that in default of payment of one instalment, the whole amount of the debt might be recovered by taking out execution of the decree. By the kistibandi certain immoveable property was pledged to secure the debt, but the kistibandi was not registered. B failed to pay the first instalment, which fell due on the 14th August 1875; and A, on the 19th June 1878, applied for execution of his decree, but the application was refused, and A referred to a regular suit.

In a suit brought by A on the 29th January 1879, against B for the whole debt due under the decree—held that, inasmuch as no appeal had been preferred against the order disallowing execution, A was bound by that decision; but that the suit might be taken to be one for an account stated in writing with an agreement for payment at a certain stated period of time as regards the instalments due, which were not barred by limitation; the suit as regards the instalments which had not fallen due being premature, and those previous to the 29th January 1876 being barred by art. 64 of the Limitation Act.

Buildings on land—Ownership in land and buildings—Suits between Hindu inhabitants of Calcutta 21 Geo. III, c. 70, s. 17—Difference in law applicable in Calcutta and the Mofussil—Equity and good conscience. At a Sheriff's sale, one Templeton bought a Hindu widow's interest in certain land in Calcutta; after passing through several hands, the land was purchased by the defendant. Between the possession of Templeton and the defendant, an intermediate holder built a house upon the land. The plaintiff, a reversionary heir to the estate after the widow's death, sued the defendant to recover possession of the house and land. The defendant admitted the plaintiff's claim to possession, but contended that he was entitled to be paid a fair price for the buildings, or to remove the materials.

Held, that he was neither entitled to compensation, nor to remove the materials, and that the question raised in the suit could not be said to be a question of either succession or inheritance so as to admit of the Hindu law being applied as directed by Geo. III, c. 70, s. 17, but that the law applicable to the case was the law of equity and good conscience as administered by the Courts of Equity in England.

JUGGUT MOHINEE DOSSEE v. DWARKA NATH BYSACK ... VIII 582

Cultivation—Changing character of lands—Forfeiture—Mandatory injunction. Where a tenant has been guilty of a breach of duty in the use of his land, such as making a tank in it, building on it improperly, or changing the character of the cultivation, such conduct does not necessarily operate as a forfeiture so as to render the tenant liable to ejectment. The tenant of an agricultural holding planted his jote with mango trees to the knowledge, but without the consent, of his landlord, thus changing the character of the land. More than three years afterwards the landlord sued for a mandatory injunction to have the mango trees removed. Held, that having stood by for more than three years and allowed the tenant to spend his labour and capital upon the land without taking any action in the matter, the landlord was not entitled to a mandatory injunction.

NOYNA MISSEER v. RUPIKUN ... IX 609

Cuttack, tenures in—Surborakari tenures—Alienation without consent of landlord—Forfeiture, alienation by one of several co-sharers. The alienation of a surborakari tenure in Cuttack, and a fortiori the alienation of any portion of such tenure, is invalid without the consent of the landlord. Assuming that the sale of such a tenure would entitle the landlord to re-enter as upon a forfeiture, the sale of a portion thereof by one of several co-sharers would not work a forfeiture of the whole tenure.

DASSORATHY HURI CHUNDER MAHAPATTRA v. RAMA KRISHNA JANA ... IX 526

Dur-maurasi mokurari tenure—Notice of relinquishment—Surrender of lease. A tenure under a dur-maurasi mokurari lease of land, which is not let for agricultural purposes, cannot be put an end to by a mere relinquishment, on the part of the lessee, although after notice to the landlord. Per FIELD, J.—The principle laid down in the case of Heera Lal Pal v. Neel Monsee Pal, where it was held that a patnidar cannot, of his own option, relinquish his tenure, is applicable to all intermediate tenures between the zamindar and the cultivator of the soil, except those held on farming leases.

JUDOONATH GHOSE v. SCHOENE KILBURN & CO. ... IX 671

MUSYATULLA v. NOORZAHAN IX 808

Enhancement—Presumption—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, ss. 3, 4. Section 4, Beng. Act VIII of 1869, entitles the holder of land for the time being, however he may have acquired it, to the benefit of the presumption prescribed in that section if he can show that there has been a continuous and uniform payment of the same rent for twenty years.

TIRTHANUND THAKOOR v. HERDU JHA IX 252

Forfeiture—Waiver by acceptance of rent. A lease provided that every four years a measurement should be made either by the lessor or by the lessees, and additional rent paid for accretion to the land leased. It then provided for failure on the lessee's part to execute a kabuliati for the excess lands in the following terms: "if at the fixed time stated above we do not take an amin and cause measurement to be made you will appoint an amin and cause the entire land of the said chur to be measured, and no objection on the ground of our recording or not, our presence on such measurement chitta shall be entertained, and we will duly file a separate dowl kabuliati for the excess rent that will be found after deducting the settled land of the dowl executed by us from the land settled therein. If we do not, we will be deprived of our right of obtaining a settlement of such excess land, as well as of the land which will accrete in future to the said chur, and no objection thereto on our part shall be entertained." In a suit by the lessor, alleging that in 1876 he had caused a measurement to be made, and had called on the lessees to execute a kabuliati for the rent of certain excess lands, and praying that the lessees might be ejected, the lessees pleaded that the lessor had waived his right to enforce the forfeiture by subsequent receipt of rent. It appeared that payments had been made to the lessor by the lessees, which were accepted as rent, but were kept in suspense, subject to payment by the lessees of the "remaining amount." Held, that such a qualification did not make the payments anything else than payments of rent, and that the lessor had waived his right to insist on re-entry on the lessees' failure to measure the lands, or execute a kabuliati when called on to do so. Davenport v. The Queen, followed.

KALI KRISHNA TAGORE v. FUZZLE ALI CHOWDHRY IX 843

Grant of land—Presumption as to nature of tenure—Erection of buildings—Bastu Land—Suit to evict. Where it is conceded that lands were not let out for agricultural purposes, but that they had apparently been let out more than sixty years before suit for building purposes, the defendants' ancestors, having erected thereon a house more than sixty years before suit, and having, with the defendants, resided there from first to last, the Court is at liberty to presume that the land was granted for building purposes, and that the grant was of a permanent character.

MAHOMED FAYEZ CHOWDHRY v. JAMOO GAZEE VIII 730

Notice to quit—Reasonable Notice. A tenant other than an occupancy ryot is entitled to a reasonable notice to quit. What is a reasonable notice is a question of fact, which must be decided in each case according to the particular circumstances and the local customs as to reaping crops and letting land. It is not necessary that the notice must expire at the end of the year.

ANABULLAH SHAIKH v. KOYLASH CHUNDER BOSE VIII 118

Landlord and Tenant—(concluded.)

Right of occupancy—Ejectment—Abandonment of holding—Failure to pay rent—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, ss. 6 and 22. When a tenant, having a right of occupancy, abandons his holding and ceases to pay rent for five years, it is not a right construction of s. 22 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, to say, that the landlord may not put another tenant into possession without the formality of a suit.

Section 6 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869 expressly limits the duration of occupancy right by the words "so long as he pays the rent payable on account of the same," and distinct abandonment and cessation to pay rent disentitle the tenant from enforcing the rights which he may have previously enjoyed.

GOLAM ALI MUNDUL v. GOLAP SOONDERY DOSSEE VIII 612

Settlement with tenant containing a clause for re-entry—Compensation in lieu of rent—Use and occupation—Trespassers. The plaintiff made a settlement of certain land with A and B for five years, there being in the settlement a stipulation that if the tenants failed to pay rent the plaintiff might accept another tenant. A died during the tenancy, and B left the place and the property without paying rent, and thereupon the plaintiff entered into possession of the property and held khus possession of it for two years, when he in 1870 entered into a settlement of it with defendant No. 1 for six years. In 1878 B died, and defendants Nos. 2 and 3 alleging themselves to be the chela and dasiputra of B took upon themselves to collect rent from the tenants. The plaintiff thereupon brought a suit against the three defendants, treating them as trespassers, but at the same time asked for the amount of rent due and for eviction. Held, that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 had no right on the property at all, and that defendant No. 1, who might have been considered as holding over after the expiration of his lease, if he had been in actual sole possession, should not be made liable for the whole rent when defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were in possession as much as he was, but that as the plaintiff had elected to waive the trespass, all the defendants might, on the authority of Ranee Lalun Monee v. Sona Monee Dabee and Luckhee Kant Dass Chowdhry v. Sumneruddi Lasker, be treated as tenants, and a decree for use and occupation given against them.

SURNOMOYEE v. DENONATH (HR SUNNYASEE IX 908

Suit for rent—Contract to pay for excess land after measurement—Notice of enhancement—Rent Act (Beng. Act VIII of 1869), s. 14.—When a tenant contracts to pay rent at a certain rate for any such land as upon measurement may be found to be in excess of the estimated area, it is not necessary to serve him with notice under s. 14 of the Rent Act before instituting a suit for the rent of any additional land, nor is it necessary that he should be present at the measurement.

DWARKANATH v. BAHURAM LASKAR IX 72

Suit for rent—Registered owner, suit by, where the relationship of landlord and tenant is not shown to exist—Beng. Act VII of 1876, s. 78. The mere fact of a person being registered under the provisions of Beng. Act VII of 1876 as proprietor of the land in respect of which he seeks to recover rent is not sufficient to entitle him to sue for it. Where a landlord who was registered as owner of the land in respect of which he claimed rent, sued the occupier for such rent, but was only able to prove the fact that he was the registered owner, and was unable to show that the relationship of landlord and tenant existed, or that he had a good title to the estate of which he was the registered owner. Held, that the suit was rightly dismissed.

Judgment—Appeal—Refusal to transmit order of Privy Council for execution. A decision by the Judge appointed to dispose of matters relating to appeals to Her Majesty in Council, refusing to transmit for execution her order restoring a decree, is a judgment within the meaning of s. 15 of the Letters Patent of 1865, and is appealable to the High Court. Held, also, that a refusal to transmit such an order for execution was not a misapprehension on the part of the Judge of the extent of his jurisdiction, although, if it had been, this itself would have been a ground of appeal.

Act XVIII of 1850 is for the protection of Judicial Officers, acting judicially, and of officers acting under their orders. An officer commanding in Cantonments, acting bonâ fide in the discharge of his public duty, and under the belief that a person was dangerous by reason of insanity, caused him to be arrested, in order that he might be examined by medical officers, and caused him to be detained in his house for that purpose, he not being a dangerous lunatic. The medical officers, while reporting him sane, recommended that he should be placed under the observation of the civil-surgeon, of the station, for which purpose the same officer caused his further detention. The Commanding Officer, who, under Act XXII of 1864, s. 11, had control and direction of the Police in the Cantonment, did not proceed or intend to proceed, under s. 4 of Act XXXVI of 1858. Held, that, although his belief might have justified the Commanding Officer, if he had proceeded under the provisions last mentioned, yet he not having done so, and not having any legal authority for what he had done, was not protected from liability in respect of the above acts.

IIARI RAM v. DENAPUT SINGH ... IX 167

Limitation—

See Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 27: Execution of Decree: Hindu Law, Alienation.
Onus probandi: Possession.

Adverse possession. On the 6th of September 1865, B obtained a patni lease of certain land from the zamindar, and at an auction-sale by the Sheriff of Calcutta, on the 21st of February 1867, the zamindar's interest was knocked down to B, and a conveyance of the property to him was executed by the Sheriff on the 1st of April 1867. On the 13th of March 1879, a suit for khas possession was brought against B by C, who had bought the property at a sale in execution of a decree made on a mortgage thereof, the date of the mortgage being the 11th of January 1865, and the date of the decree being 30th of November 1865. B pleaded adverse possession.

Held, that B's possession as patnidar only could not be considered as adverse to C, who claimed the superior interest; that B's possession as purchaser could not be considered to have commenced before the date of the conveyance to him by the Sheriff—namely, the 1st of April 1867; and that, therefore, the plea of adverse possession was bad, since the suit had been instituted within twelve years of that date.

Where a suit by a tenant against his landlord is both in form and substance one to recover possession on the ground of illegal dispossession by the landlord, and no question of the plaintiff's title is raised, the insertion in the plaint of a claim for declaration of the plaintiff's title is not sufficient to prevent the application of the limitation prescribed by s. 27 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869. *Mussamut & Hurjobutty Chowdrain v. JOYNTI DASI v. MAHOMED ALIY KHAN IX 423

Bengal Act VIII of 1869, s. 29—Suit for arrears of rent. After the expiration of the period prescribed by s. 29 of the Bengal Act VIII of 1869, a plaintiff suing for arrears of rent cannot insist on the pendency of another suit, brought by him for possession of the land, as preventing limitation from running, where there has been no time during which such rent could not have been recovered if he had acted on his right of suing for it. In Tam Sarnomoyee v. Shoshee Mookhee Burmonca, the claimant of rent was, until the setting aside of the sale that had taken place, in the possession of a person whose claim had been satisfied. The right to sue in that case had been suspended; and it was, therefore, distinguishable from the present. The plaintiff's ancestor purchased a taluk from the Government, subject to an ijara therein held by the defendants, which expired in 1866. A suit brought by the plaintiff in 1874 for possession was dismissed finally in 1876, the defendant's claim to remain in possession under another tenure being allowed. The plaintiff in 1876 sued the defendants for arrears of rent for the years 1866—1872. Held, that the suit was barred under s. 29 notwithstanding the proceedings of 1874.

HURO PERSHAD ROY v. GOPAL DAS DUTT IX 255

Bengal Act VIII of 1869, s. 30—Suit to recover balance of Tahsildar's account after dismissal—Special agreement. The defendant was tahsildar of one of the plaintiff's zamindaries, and, after his dismissal on the 24th of August 1876, he submitted an account, which was found to be incorrect, and time was given to him to make good certain items on his executing an ikrar, promising to pay whatever balance should be found due from him to the plaintiff. In a suit brought on the 28th of October 1878, to recover the balance found on inquiry to be due,—held that s. 30 of Act VIII of 1869 had no application, the special agreement taking the case out of the scope of that section, and therefore the suit was not barred by reason of having been brought more than one year after the defendant's dismissal. *BEER CHUNDER MANICKYA v. - Bengal Act VIII of 1869, s. 58—Landlord and tenant—Execution of decree—Installments. On the 10th of July 1878, a rent-decree was passed in favour of certain parties for the sum of Rs. 168, payable in two equal instalments, on the 4th of June 1879 and the 30th of October 1879, respectively. On the 18th July 1881, the decree-holders applied for execution of the decree. Held, by the majority of the Full Bench (GARTH, C. BHOLANATH ROY v. NURENDRO NATH ROY ... IX 380
- Execution of Decree—Res Judicata—Act VIII of 1859, s. 246—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 278. In the course of certain execution-proceedings in execution of a decree for arrears of rent, the decree-holder attached a tenure belonging to the judgment-debtor, who, pending the attachment, sold it to A, on the 21st March 1869. A then applied, under s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859, for an order to release the tenure from attachment; but the application was dismissed, on the ground that the alienation had been made pending the attachment. In 1877, the heirs and successors in title of the decree-holder abovementioned obtained another decree for arrears of rent against the same defendant, and in execution thereof again attached the tenure. A applied under s. 278 of the Code of Civil Procedure to have the property released, but his application was rejected on the 3rd of May 1879. In a suit brought by A, on the 6th of May 1879, to establish his right to, and confirm his possession of, the tenure, the lower Courts dismissed the suit, on the ground that it ought to have been brought within one year from the 21st of March 1869. s. 20, and Act IX of 1871, s. 1—Execution of Decree in suit instituted before 1st April 1873. An application for execution of a decree is an application in the suit in which the decree has been obtained. From this, and from the enactment in s. 1 of Act IX of 1871, that nothing contained in s. 2, or in Part II of that Act, shall apply to suits instituted before the 1st April 1873, it follows, that nothing contained in sched. II of that Act extended to an application for execution of a decree in a suit instituted before that date. No such application was barred by s. 20 of Act XIV of 1859, if made within three years from the date of a proceeding within the meaning of that section. Although the execution of a decree may have been actually barred by time at the date of an application made for its execution, yet, if an order for such execution has been regularly made by a competent Court, having jurisdiction to try whether it was barred by time or not, such order, although erroneous, must, if unreversed, be treated as valid.

Where a sale of attached property is stayed by a Court upon the application of the judgment-debtor, on condition of the attachment remaining in force, the subsequent striking of such application from the file of the Court does not affect the rights of the decree-holder.

MUNGUL PERSHAD DCHIT v. GRIJA KANT LAHIRI ... VIII 51

IX of 1871—

Art. 15 (XV of 1877), sched. The plaintiff put in a claim to the property under s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859, which claim was rejected on the 6th of September 1873. The plaintiff, on the 10th of January 1878, brought a suit to recover possession of the property sold. Held, that the suit was not barred under art. 11 of sched. II of Act XV of 1877, which refers to the section in Act X of 1877, corresponding to s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859; and that the suit was not

Sched. ii, art. 93—Attempt to enforce deed—Wusilat. In a suit in which the plaintiff had obtained a decree, and the defendant had appealed to Her Majesty in Council, a third party applied to be added as a respondent, on the ground that, by registered deed, the plaintiff had conveyed to him a share of the property decreed. The defendant objected that the deed was a forgery; but an order was made that the applicant should be joined as a respondent, without deciding whether the deed was or was not genuine, and "without prejudice," in the words of the order, "to any action or proceeding by the defendant."

Held, that the setting up the deed and insisting upon it for this purpose constituted "an attempt to enforce" it, and that a suit brought, more than three years after the making of that order, by the appellant against the party so joined as a respondent, to have the deed set aside as being false and fabricated, was barred by limitation under Act IX of 1871, sched. ii, cl. 93.

FAKHARUDDIN MAHOMED AHSAN v. THE OFFICIAL TRUSTEE OF BENGAL ... VIII 178

Art. 140. See Limitation Act, 1877, art. 111.

Art. 144—Breach of condition—Forfeiture—Alienation by Hindu widow. A Hindu widow, under an arrangement with her deceased husband's cousin, was in possession for life of a share of ancestral property of her husband's family, in which he, jointly with the cousin, had held a share in his lifetime. This share she sold as if she had held an absolute interest, and the purchaser's name was entered, instead of hers, in the revenue records; but no change of possession took place till her death.

To a suit brought by the cousin's heirs to recover the property purchased from the widow, more than twelve years after the sale, but less than twelve years after the widow's death, the defence was limitation under Act IX of 1871, sched. ii, cl. 144, commencing from the date of the sale, there having been, it was alleged, "a breach of condition or forfeiture" within the meaning of that clause.

By the terms of the arrangement contained in a solamama, the widow was to have no power to alienate; and after her death her share was to belong to the cousin.

Held, that these terms prohibited only such an alienation by the widow as would prevent the cousin's succeeding after her death, and the alienation made was good for the widow's lifetime. There was no condition against such an alienation; and if there had been, there was neither any rule of law, nor anything in the words used in the solamama, attaching forfeiture to the breach of such a condition.

Held, accordingly, that art. 144 did not apply, and the suit was not barred by limitation.

s. 2, sched. ii, art. 11—Claim to mortgaged property—Execution of Decree. In execution of a decree upon a mortgage, a claim to the mortgaged property was put in under s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859 by certain persons, on the ground that they had purchased the right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtor in execution of a previous decree. The claim was allowed on the 26th July 1877. On the 29th March 1879, the mortgagee instituted a suit to establish his right to the property. The period of limitation for such a suit under Act XV of 1877 is one year from the date of the order; but under Act IX of 1871, a longer period was prescribed. Act XV of 1877 did not come into force until the 1st of October 1877.

Held, that the provisions of the last paragraph of s. 2 of Act XV of 1877 applied, and that the suit was not barred.

In execution of a decree, dated the 17th January 1877, the judgment-creditor applied on the 13th May 1878 to have the property of his judgment-debtor sold on the 16th September 1878. Subsequently on the 2nd June 1881 he made further application to have the decree executed. Held, that the case was governed by the provisions of art. 167 of Act IX of 1871, and not by those of art. 179 of Act XV of 1877, and that as the application had not been made within any one of the periods given in the third column of art. 167, it was barred by limitation. Held, also, following Mungul Pershad Ditchi v. Gria Kant Lahiri, that although there is no corresponding provision in Act XV of 1877 to that contained in s. 1 of Act IX of 1871, all applications for execution of a decree are applications in the suit which resulted in that decree. Held, further, that under s. 6 of Act I of 1868 the repeal of Act IX of 1871 by Act XV of 1877 does not affect any proceedings commenced before the repealing Act came into force. Ite Ratansi Kalianji, followed.

s. 19, sched. ii, art. 179—Acknowledgment in writing—Authority to sign acknowledgment. On the 7th of December 1877, additional time for payment of the amount of a decree, dated the 24th of March 1876, was granted to the judgment-debtor upon a petition signed by his vakeel. On the 4th of December 1880 a fresh application for execution was made.

Held, that it was not barred under art. 179, sched. ii of Act XV of 1877, inasmuch as the petition constituted an acknowledgment of liability under s. 19 of the same Act, and a new period of limitation began to run from the 7th of December 1877. The object of the words "application in respect of any property or right" in s. 19 is to extend to the applications mentioned in sched. ii the same privilege as is accorded to suits.

s. 7—Minor Plaintiff—Application for execution by guardian. A plaintiff, who has obtained a decree during his minority, has the option either of applying through his guardian to execute the decree during his minority or to wait until the expiration of his minority before executing his decree. The application of the guardian is the application of the infant. The minor is under disability during the whole period of his minority. His disability does not cease, because he, through his guardian, makes two or more applications for execution however long the interval between them, provided they are all made during his minority.

- s. 26—Dispossession—Fishery—custom—suit to restrain fishing in certain bhils.
In a suit to restrain the defendants from fishing in certain bhils, which admittedly belonged to the plaintiff's zamindari, it appeared that the plaintiff had let out some of the bhils to ijaradars who had sued the defendants for the price of fish taken by them from the bhils, and that the suit had been dismissed, on the ground that the defendants, in common with other inhabitants of the villages in the zamindari, had acquired a prescriptive right to fish in the bhils. The defendants contended that they had been in possession of the bhils for more than 12 years, and that they had a prescriptive right to fish therein, under a custom according to which all the inhabitants of the zamindari had the right of fishing. Held, that the mere fact that the defendants had trespassed and had misappropriated fish did not amount to a dispossession of the plaintiff, and that the suit was not barred by limitation. Parbatty Nath Roy Chowdhury v. Mudho Paroe, distinguished. Held, also, that no prescriptive right of fishery had been acquired under s. 26 of the Limitation Act, and that the custom alleged could not, on the ground that it was unreasonable, be treated as valid. *Lord Rivers v. The defendants attached certain property, which the plaintiffs alleged belonged to them. The plaintiffs preferred a claim to the property under s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859: this claim was disallowed on the 15th August 1877. Held, that the order of the 15th August 1877 not being an order passed under s. 283 of Act X of 1877, art. 11 of sched. ii of Act XV of 1877 did not apply, but that art. 120 of sched ii was applicable; and that as the first suit had not been dismissed upon the merits, the plaintiffs were entitled to maintain the second suit.

On the 27th of March 1873, the former order was cancelled and a certificate was granted to A. On the 19th of August 1873, B was directed to deliver up the property to C, who had purchased it from A. On the 22nd of March 1878, C instituted a suit to recover the property. Held, that the suit was barred under art. 49 of the Limitation Act. Article 123 of the Limitation Act only applies to cases in which the property sought to be recovered is not only a legacy, but is also sought to be recovered as such from a person who is bound by law to pay such legacy, either because he is the executor of the will or otherwise represents the estate of the testator.

A by his last will and testament gave his property to trustees, partly in trust for religious and other purposes, and partly to pay thereout to certain persons and their heirs forever certain annuities, being fixed portions of the net profits of a certain estate called the Hurro estate, which amounted to Rs. 3,150. A died in November 1863. On the 11th of August 1879, the heir of one of the annuitants instituted a suit claiming a share under the will, and asking for a partition of that share. The plaintiff alleged besides, that certain of the trusts and provisions in the will were invalid in law; that, consequently, a large portion of the testator's property remained undisposed of at his death, and she claimed a share of this residue as one of the heirs of the testator.

Held that, under the circumstances, the gift of the share of the rents and profits amounted to a gift of a share in the corpus of the estate; and that, in respect of that portion of the plaintiff's claim, the suit was not barred by limitation.

MODHO KOORY v. TEKAIT RAM CHUNDER SINGH ... IX 411

Arts. 139, 144.—Jauldard and tenant—Suit for possession—Cause of action. The plaintiff stated that in the year 1862 he purchased a talook in which some of the defendants then held an ijara for a term of years expiring in 1868. The talook had previously been a khas mehal in the possession of the Government, and was brought by the plaintiff at an auction sale held by the Collector. The plaintiff also stated that the ijaradar defendants, in collusion with the other defendants, had continued in possession of the lands held in ijara after the term of the ijara had expired, and had refused to give up possession thereof to the plaintiff. The Judge of the lower Appellate Court found that the defendants (other than the ijaradars) had been in possession previously to the sale in 1862, and he also found that there was no evidence to support the charge of collusion with the ijaradar defendants. He therefore dismissed the suit (which was brought in 1880) on the ground of limitation. Held, on second appeal, that the plaintiff's cause of action arose on the expiration of the ijara, and that the suit, whether governed by articles 139 or 144 of the Limitation Act, XV of 1877, was not barred on the ground of limitation.

Art. 141—Alienation by Hindu Widow—Adverse possession. A titleby adverse possession for more than twelve years accrues even during the lifetime of a Hindu widow, but if possession arises directly from any invalid alienation on her part, special provision is made for the right to sue on the part of the reversioners within twelve years from her death and the accrual of their titles.

GYA PERSAD Alias LAL PERSAD v. HEET NARAIN ... IX 93

Art. 141—Suit by reversioners after death of Hindu widow. In 1846, a widow, under an ikarnama, made over to her brother-in-law certain properties formerly belonging to the estate of one Luchmi Narain, her late husband. The widow died in 1878. In March 1879, a suit was brought by the daughters of Luchmi Narain to recover the properties, formerly belonging to their father, from the hands of certain vendees.

Held, that the suit by the reversioners was not barred under art. 141 of Act XV of 1877, there having been no possession adverse to the widow, by dispossession for more than twelve years, the widow's cause of action having ceased when she entered into the ikarnama in 1846, and gave up her right to the property; nor, under sched. ii of Act XV of 1877, could the right of the plaintiffs be said to be barred by any Act repealed thereby, inasmuch as art. 142 of Act IX of 1871 prescribes the same period of limitation as is prescribed in art. 141 of Act XV of 1877; and that although, under Act XIV of 1859, repealed by Act IX of 1871, it was decided in Nobin Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Guru Prasad Dass, that adverse possession which bars a widow also bars the reversionary heirs, yet the exception laid down in that case would be applicable, and would save limitation.

Art. 179—Execution of decree, Application for—Acknowledgment in writing. The more payment of a Court-fee in connection with execution proceedings, with a view to obtain leave to bid for property then up for sale in execution of a decree, does not constitute "the taking of some step in aid of execution" within the meaning of art. 179, sched. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), so as to prevent the execution of the decree being barred within three years from the date of such payment. An application for the execution of a decree is an application in respect of a "right" within the meaning of s. 19, Act XV of 1877, and a petition made by a judgment-debtor, and signed by his vakool, praying for additional time for payment of the amount of a decree, constitutes an "acknowledgment of liability" within the meaning of that section, and a new period of limitation should be computed from the date of such petition in order to ascertain whether the execution of the decree is barred or not under the provisions of art. 179, sched. II of the Limitation Act. Ramhit Rai v. Satgur Rai; and Ram Coomar Kher v. Jakur Ali, followed.

The words 'Appellate Court' signify the Court or Courts to which the appeal, mentioned in the article, has been preferred.

WAZIR MAHTON v. LULIT SING IX 100

Art. 179—Execution of decree—Partition—Joint Decree—Decree for partition. A consent decree for partition made between three parties contained a provision that if the plaintiffs should not have the property partitioned within two months from the date thereof, any one of the other parties to the suit might obtain partition by executing the decree. One of the parties sued out execution and obtained partition and possession of his own share. More than three years after the date of the decree, but less than three years from the date of the application just mentioned, another of the parties applied for partition under the decree. Held, that application was not barred by limitation under the provisions of the Limitation Act, XV of 1877, sched. II, art. 179, cl. 3. exp. 1.

MOHUN CHUNDER KURMOKAR v. MOHESH CHUNDER KURMOKAR IX 568

Art. 179—Execution of decree, Application for—Step in aid of execution—Repeal, Effect of. On the 28th September 1877 an application was made for execution of a decree. On the 8th July 1878 the decree-holder deposited Rs. 2 as Nilamsee fees that is to say, costs for bringing certain property to sale in execution of the decree. On the 28th March 1881 a further application for execution of the decree, was made. Held, that the deposit of Rs. 2 as Nilamsee fees on the 8th July 1878 was a step in aid of execution of the decree, and that the application of the 28th March 1881, being within three years from the date of the deposit, was not barred by limitation.

Quere.—Whether, inasmuch as Act IX of 1871 is repealed by Act XV of 1877, and the later Act contains no provision similar to that contained in s. 1 of Act IX of 1871, Act XIV of 1859 can be said to have been repealed in respect of suits instituted before the 1st of April 1873.

Art. 179—Application for execution of decree—Order staying execution. The plaintiff obtained an ex parte decree on 7th February 1876, of which he applied for execution on the 31st May 1876. Thereupon the defendant applied to set aside the decree, on the ground that he had had no notice of the suit, and an order was made staying the execution of the decree. The defendant's application was rejected on the 15th November 1876, and an appeal by the defendant, pending which the stay of execution was continued, was dismissed on the 19th December 1877. Previously, vis., on the 21st February 1877, the execution-case had been struck off the file. Held that, notwithstanding the application was made more than three years after the decree, and the plaintiff was not entitled to any deduction of the time during which the execution was stayed by order of Court, an application for execution made on the 10th December 1880 was, under art. 179 of Act XV of 1877, not barred, the decree not being final until the order dismissing the appeal on the 19th December 1877.

Suit for account against executor—Sale by Sheriff in execution of decree—Right of Purchaser at Sheriff's sale against purchaser at sale by mortgagee. In 1855, a decree for an account was passed, in the Supreme Court at Calcutta, against A, an executor. A died in 1856, and the suit, which was revived against his representatives, came on for consideration on further directions on the 29th of August 1866. It was then found, that A's estate was liable for Rs. 1,32,406-11-8, and his representatives were ordered to pay this money into Court. The representatives having made default in payment, a writ of fiat facias was issued, under which certain property was sold by the Sheriff of Calcutta and conveyed by him to B on the 1st of April 1877. Previously to this the representatives of A had, on the 11th of January 1865, mortgaged the same property, together with other lands, "for the purpose of paying the Government revenue of certain taluqs belonging to A deceased," and the mortgagee having obtained a decree on his mortgage, the property was sold to C, in execution of the mortgage-decree, on the 30th of March 1867. In a suit for possession by C against B, the latter pleaded lis pendens.

Held, that the nature of the suit, in which the decree of 1855 and the subsequent order of 1866 were passed, was not such as to warrant the application of the doctrine of lis pendens to the mortgage of the 11th of January 1855.

Acknowledgment of children as sons. The acknowledgment and recognition of children by a Mahomedan as his sons, giving them the status of sons capable of inheriting as being of legitimate birth, may, without proof of his express acknowledgment of them, be inferred from his treatment of such children, provided that certain conditions negating this relationship are absent.

The question whether such acknowledgment should be presumed or not, depends on the circumstances of each particular case. Ashrufodd Dowlati Ahmed Hossein Khan v. Hyder Hossein Khan referred to and followed.

MAHAMAD AZMAT ALI KHAN v. LALLI BEGUM ... VIII 422

Debts—Administration, suit for—Suit by creditor of deceased mahomedan against his heir—Sale in execution of decree. After the death of a mahomedan, several of his creditors sued his widow and daughter, and obtained decrees against the assets of the deceased, which assets had come into the possession of the mother and daughter. In execution of these decrees portions of the property were sold; thereupon two married sisters of the deceased, who lived with their husbands apart from the widow and daughter, sued as heirs of the deceased to recover their shares of the property sold.

Held, that the property of the deceased having been attached and sold in payment of his debts, the plaintiffs' suit must be dismissed.

When a creditor of a deceased mahomedan sues the heir in possession, and obtains a decree against the assets of the deceased, such a suit is to be looked upon as an administration-suit, and those heirs of the deceased who have not been made parties cannot, in the absence of fraud, claim anything but what remains after the debts of the testator have been paid.

Debts—Sale in execution of money-decree against the representatives of deceased mahomedan—Rights of purchaser at execution-sale against mortgagee—Notice. In execution of a money-decree against the heirs of a deceased mahomedan for a debt incurred by him, A purchased certain property which had been allotted to the widow of the deceased in lieu of dower and of her share of the inheritance. Previously to the purchase, however, the widow had mortgaged the same property to B, who, at the time of the mortgage, knew of the debt for which the decree was obtained. In a suit by B against A, on the mortgage, it was not shown that there were not assets in the hands of the heirs-at-law to satisfy the debt due to A's vendor.

Held, that B was entitled to recover.

Spyd Bazayet Hossein v. Dooli Chund followed.

NARSINGH DASS v. NAJMOODDIN HOSSEIN VIII 20

Divorce—Divorce by wife. Under the Mahomedan law, a husband may give his wife the power to divorce herself from him according to the form prescribed by that law for divorce by the husband.

HAMIDOOOLA v. FAIZUNNISSA VIII 327

Endowment—Wuqf—Provisions for payment of debts and maintenance. A Mahomedan created a wuqf of all his property, and appointed his minor grandson mutwali, providing that, during the minority, the property should be managed by the minor's father. The deed contained a provision that, in the first place, certain debts should be paid, and then provided that the property should be applied towards the religious uses created and the maintenance of the settlor's grandsons and their male issue. In execution of a decree against the minor's father, the endowed property was attached and sold. In a suit by the minor through his sister, as guardian, to recover possession of the property, held, that, notwithstanding the provisions for payment of the debts and maintenance, the wuqf was valid.

LUCHMIPUT SINGH v. AMIR ALUM IX 176

Gift—Requisites of gift—Gift in futuro. Under the Mahomedan law a gift is not valid unless it is accompanied by possession, nor can it be made to take effect at any future definite period. A document, containing the words, "I have executed an ikrar to this effect that, so long as I live, I shall enjoy and possess the properties, and that I shall not sell or make gift to any one; but after my death you will be the owner, and also have a right to sell or to make a gift after my death."

Held to be an ordinary gift of property 'in futuro' and as such invalid under Mahomedan law.

YUSUF ALI v. COLLECTOR OF TIPPERA IX 138

Guardian—Minor—Certificate of Guardianship. Under the Mahomedan law the brother of the mother of a female minor, whose parents are dead, is entitled, in preference to a mere stranger, to the guardianship of the property of the minor, unless it be shown that he is in some way unfit to take charge of such property.

Joint mahomedan family—Joint acquisition—Presumption. When the members of a mahomedan family live in commensality, they do not form a 'joint family' in the sense in which that expression is used with regard to Hindus; and in Mahomedan law there is not, as there is in Hindu law, any presumption that the acquisitions of the several members are made for the benefit of the family jointly.

Marriage—Mutta form of marriage—Repudiation—Divorce. The mutta form of marriage does not admit of repudiation under the law of the Shea sect of mahomedans.

Quere.—Whether the form of divorce called zihar may be exercised in the mutta form of marriage.

IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF LUDDUN SAHIBA VIII 736

Wukf or endowed property—Office of mutwali nature of—Transfer of, performance of duties of, by agent. The office of mutwali is a trust which a woman, equally with a man, is capable of undertaking, but it is a personal trust, and the office may not be transferred, nor the endowed property conveyed to any person whom the acting mutwali may select.

The word 'deputy,' in book 9, Chap. V, p. 591 of Baillie's Mahomedan law, signifies some one who, as an agent, may be employed to perform the duties of the office, as to collect rents and to assist the mutwali in expending the proceeds of the endowed property for charitable purposes.

Act IX of 1861—Jurisdiction of District Judge—Marriage—Custody of minor—

Injunction. The paternal uncle of a female Hindu minor, whose father was dead, applied to the District Judge, under Act IX of 1861, for the custody of the minor, and for an injunction to prevent the mother of the minor from carrying out a projected marriage. On the 8th of March 1881, the Judge issued an ad interim injunction. When the application came on for hearing, it appeared that the marriage had taken place before the order of injunction had reached the parties. The District Judge found that though the mother was entitled to the custody of the minor, yet the petitioner was entitled to give the minor in marriage in preference to the mother. The District Judge also found that the marriage had not in fact been validly performed. On appeal to the High Court, it was contended that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to determine the right of any party to give an infant in marriage on an application under Act IX of 1861, or to grant an injunction; and it was also contended that the magistrate was wrong in entering into the question of the factum of the marriage.

Held that, under the provisions of Act IX of 1861, the District Judge had jurisdiction.

Balmakund v. Janki, Wolverhampton Waterworks Co. v. Hawkesford, and Collector of Pubna v. Romanath Tagore referred to.

Held also, that for the purpose of deciding whether the injunction should issue, the Judge was justified in entering into the question of the factum of the marriage, though his finding, on that point would have no effect in determining its validity.

It appearing that the mortgagee deliberately abstained from executing his decree against eleven properties which still remained in the possession of the mortgagor, but proceeded against the one property which had passed out of the mortgagor's possession, the mortgage debt was directed to be apportioned between the twelve properties, and the mortgagee was not to be allowed to take out execution against the property which had passed out of the mortgagor's possession, except for the amount which should be apportioned to such property, without satisfying the Court that he had made every possible effort to execute the remainder of his decree against the other eleven properties.

Money decree on mortgage bond—Mortgagee's—lien—Registration Act (XX of 1866), s. 58—Frame of suit—Parties. A and B co-mortgagees, obtained a summary decree under the Registration Act XX of 1866, s. 53, on the 6th May 1868, in respect of certain property which was again mortgaged by the owner to C and D in March 1869. C and D having also obtained a decree on their mortgage brought the property to sale in execution of their decree and purchased it themselves in December 1874. A not having had the whole of his mortgage-debt satisfied instituted a suit on the 13th December 1879 against C and D, and the representatives of B (B having meanwhile died and his representatives not joining in the suit), to enforce his lien against the mortgaged property in the hands of C and D, and to recover the share of the mortgage-debt still due to himself alone. Held, that A did not acquire a better right to proceed against the property by reason of its having come into the hands of C and D, nor did C and D take subject to a greater burden than the mortgagor himself, and that as A had allowed his decree against the mortgagor to be barred by limitation, he had lost all right to proceed against the property by execution were it in the hands of the mortgagor, and consequently he could not be allowed to proceed against it by suit, merely because it was in the hands of third parties. *Syul Emam Montazooddeen Mahomed v. *Mortgage by executors—Suit on mortgage—Administration-suit—Writ of fi-fa—Sheriff's Sale—Lis Pendens—Sale in execution of decree.* In a suit by the representatives of P1, against his brother AD and after AD's death against his executors, it was found that there was over Rs. 1,32,400 due to the plaintiff from the estate of the deceased; and, on the 29th of August 1866, the executors were ordered to pay this sum into Court. The executors disobeyed; and, on the 24th of December 1866, a writ of fi-fa was issued from the High Court, in execution of which certain property belonging to the estate of AD was sold to the defendants on the 18th of July 1867. Previously, however, on the 12th of October 1866, the executors had mortgaged the same property to the plaintiff, who brought a suit on his mortgage on the 10th of June 1867. On the 28th of August 1867, the present defendants were made parties to that suit, and in their written statement they alleged that they had been improperly made parties and claimed a title superior to that of the plaintiff. That suit was dismissed with costs as against the present defendants, on the ground, that they were improperly added; but a decree for sale was given against the executors, in execution of which the mortgaged property was sold to the plaintiff. In a subsequent suit brought by the plaintiff for possession—

Held, that the defendants were entitled to redeem, and were not affected by the suit of 1867 as a lis pendens.

Mortgaged Property, Conveyance of, to mortgagee—Attachment and sale of same property under another decree—Suit by mortgagee to recover money advanced on mortgage-bond—Avoidance of conveyance—Lien. In 1874, the plaintiff advanced money to F and Z on the security of a mortgage of certain properties. In 1875, the plaintiff took a conveyance of the properties mortgaged to him, setting off the money due to him under the mortgage against the consideration-money. At the time of this conveyance, the same property was under attachment under a decree obtained by another person, and the property was, in execution of this decree, put up for sale, and purchased by one G.

In a suit brought by the plaintiff on the mortgage-bond (to recover the money lent, and asking that the properties might be made liable to satisfy the debt) against FZ, and G, it was held, that the conveyance of 1875 being void as against G, the plaintiff was entitled to fall back upon the lien created by the mortgage-bond.

He afterwards brought a suit for possession against the mortgagors, and their co-sharers, on the suggestion of the mortgagors that it would be undefended. It was, however, defended by the co-sharers, and the suit was dismissed. The mortgage-deed contained no covenant to repay the money lent. In an action for damages brought by the mortgagee against his mortgagors—held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the money lent and interest, and the cost of the second suit.

KASUMUNNISSA BIBEK v. NILRATNA BOSE ... VIII 79

Payment of—Extinction of charge—Intention of parties—Presumption. Whether a mortgage, paid off, has been kept alive or extinguished depends upon the intention of the parties; the mere fact that it has been paid off not deciding the question whether or not it has been extinguished. Express declaration of intention will cause either the one result or the other, and in the absence of such expression, the intention may be inferred, either one way or the other. A lender of money upon a mortgage, which, however, having been made by a person not having authority to charge the greater part of the property included in it, was to that extent invalid, relied upon a charge effected in a prior paid off mortgage to another mortgagee of the same property. The balance due for the prior mortgage debt had been paid out of the money advanced on the later, and the prior instrument had come into the possession of the present mortgagee. Held, that it must be presumed, in the absence of any expression of intention to the contrary, that the borrower, who claimed to be the owner of the property which he attempted to charge, intended that the money should be applied in paying off and extinguishing the prior mortgage, there being no intermediate incumbrance. It being, also, presumable that the lender lent the money upon the security of the later mortgage, he did not become entitled to an additional security, merely, because that which he had taken had thus proved invalid in part. Held, therefore, that the prior mortgage had been extinguished.

Evidence—Jaghir tenure—Auladad grant—Suit for possession. By a sanad dated March 1854, the plaintiff's ancestor granted to B, the defendant's ancestor, a jaghir of a certain mauza. B died in 1872, and plaintiff subsequently brought a suit to recover possession of the mauza, alleging that the grant to B was an ordinary service jaghir. The plaintiff filed a kabuliat which had been executed by B, the terms of which supported the plaintiff's allegation as to the nature of the grant. The defendant alleged that the grant was auladad, but failed to produce the sanad or account for its non production.

Partition—Private arrangement—Subsequent partition by Collector. A and B were joint owners of a mauza. B leased his share in part to C. By arrangement between A and C, a partition of the lands was made, and each party collected the rents of the lands allotted to him. Forty years afterwards, a butwara of the mauza was made by the Collector between A and B, whereby lands held by C, under the previous arrangement, were allotted to A. C was not party to the butwara proceedings. In a suit brought by A against C for possession of the lands so allotted, the plaintiff alleged that the previous division of the lands between A and C was a temporary one, made after the commencement of the butwara proceedings. The lower Appellate Court found that the plaintiff's allegations had not been proved, and dismissed the suit.

Held (TOTTENHAM, J., dissenting), that the decree of the lower Court was correct, as it lay on the plaintiff to show that the private partition had come to an end.

Resumption, Suit for—Rent-free lands—Landlord and Tenant. In suits for the resumption of lands alleged by the defendant to be lakheraj, the burden of proof is in the first instance on the plaintiff to show that the lands are mal. The fact that the defendant is a tenant of the plaintiff's is a matter to be taken into consideration by the Court in determining whether, on the facts of the case, the plaintiff has made out a prima facie case; but unless the Court finds that the

Oudh Estates Act—

I of 1869, ss. 8, 9 and 10—Recognition of trust—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Declaratory decree, Suit for. Notwithstanding the confiscation of land in Oudh, followed by its restoration under the Government Order of 11th March 1858, affirming the absolute title of those with whom summary settlements had been made, and the granting of sanads to the latter persons, with full power of alienation, confirmed by "The Oudh Estates Act, 1869," the legal owner may, either by express agreement, or by his conduct, constitute himself a trustee for others as to the whole or part of the beneficial interest in the land, the subject of such restoration, settlement, and sanad.

A taluqdar, deceased before annexation, had provided by will for the succession of his five widows, one at a time, to his estate, with remainder to a son of his nephew. Settlement was made with the senior widow after the mutiny; a sanad granted to her as taluqdar, with full power of alienation, and her name was afterwards entered in the lists prepared under s. 8 of "The Oudh Estates Act, 1869." But certain of her acts were not explicable except on the understanding that she was abiding by the will.

Held, in a suit by the widow next in order, that such senior widow had undertaken the trust of carrying out the provisions of the will, and that a deed of gift made by her transferred only her interest, which was an estate for life.

Held also, in a suit by the remainderman for a declaration of the invalidity of the transfer by the widow as against him, that although declaratory relief might have been, at the Court's discretion, refused to him, on the ground of his remoteness in remainder, and the identity of the object of his suit with that of the other, yet he was entitled on this appeal to the decree which he sought because his suit had been wrongly decided against him on the merits.

MANICKYA MOYEE v. BORODA PROSAD MOOKERJEE ... IX 355

Application to add a defendant -- Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 28 and 32 -- Judicature Act, Order vi, Rules 3 and 6. The plaintiffs brought a suit to recover certain sums of money from the defendants, due to them under certain contracts which they alleged had been entered into by themselves, and one A D, as agent of the defendants, and asked for an account.

The defendants, in their written statement, contended that there was no privity of contract between themselves and the plaintiffs, and denied the alleged agency of A D.

The plaintiffs, before the hearing, applied to the Court to have A D added as a party-defendant under ss. 28 and 32 of Act X of 1877, asking to be allowed to amend their plaint so as to pray for relief in the alternative against the original defendants or the said A D, or both against the original defendants and the said A D.

Held, that, under s. 28, they were entitled to the order on the authority of the case of Child v. Stenning.

BUDDREE DOSS v. HOARE, MILLER & CO. ... VIII 170

Frame of suit -- suit against parties who do not join as plaintiffs. A and B, co-mortgagees, obtained a summary decree under the Registration Act, XX of 1866, s. 53, on the 6th May 1868, in respect of certain property which was again mortgaged by the owner to C and D in March 1869. C and D, having also obtained a decree on their mortgage, sold the property in execution of their decree and purchased it themselves in December 1874. A not having had the whole of his mortgage debt satisfied instituted a suit on the 13th December 1879 against C and D, and the representatives of B (B having meanwhile died, and his representatives not joining in the suit), to enforce his lien against the mortgaged property in the hands of C and D, and to recover the share of the mortgage-debt still due to himself alone. Quere -- Whether the suit, although one for only a portion of the debt due on the mortgage (B's representatives not having joined and claimed the share due to them), was not properly framed assuming it would lie.

Non-joinder of a necessary party -- Suit to set aside alienation of debutter lands -- Trust for religious purposes. The representatives of three out of four Hindus, who were joint sebhais, managing debutter property, sued to have an alienation, made by the fourth sebai alone, set aside. They did not make the latter a party to the suit, nor did the plaintiffs ask the assistance of the Court to make him one, under s. 73 of Act VIII of 1859.

Held, that he was a necessary party. It was not enough that he was a member of the body of sebhais; and although indirectly he might have gained advantage from the suit brought by the other sebhais, this did not suffice to connect him with the suit as a party to it. No ground of making an exception to the general rule was presented.

Suit by mortgagee -- Patnadar under mortgage. KASUMUNNISSA BIBEE v. NIBRATNA BOSE ... VIII 79

Suit for arrears of rent -- Co-sharers -- Appeal, amendment on. In a suit for arrears of rent of the plaintiff's share of a taluq, it appeared that, in the year 1279, a butwara was effected of the zamindari in which the defendants taluq was situated, and that the taluq ceased to be held exclusively by the plaintiff, and was divided between him and certain other persons, who were not made parties to the suit.

Held, that all the co-sharers should have been joined as parties, and that, as this had not been done, the suit was bad.

OBHOY GOBIND CHOWDHRY v. HURYCHURN CHOWDHRY ... VIII 277

Suit for rent -- Title of third party alleged by defendant -- Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 28. Per FIELD, J. -- Where a person sued for rent sets up the title of a third party, and alleges that he holds under, and pays rent to him, such third party ought not to be made a party to the suit so as to convert a simple suit for arrears of rent into one for the determination of the title to the property in respect of which the rent is claimed.

Such a suit raises only two issues, viz. :—

(1) Does the relation of landlord and tenant exist between the plaintiff and defendant?

(2) Are the alleged arrears of rent due and unpaid?

And these are questions in which the plaintiff and defendant are alone concerned, and no third party claiming a title adverse to the plaintiff can properly be made a party to the trial of these issues.

Section 28 of the Civil Procedure Code is not imperative, but allows a discretion to be exercised; and in such a suit it is better, both in the interests of Government and for the proper adjudication of the question of title, that it should be tried by a competent Court in a suit directly framed and brought for that purpose.

LODAI MOHAMMAD v. KALLY DASS ROY ... VIII 238

Suit to set aside sale for arrears of revenue—Secretary of State Civil Procedure Code, 1877, ss. 32, 424. The Secretary of State is not a necessary party to a suit to set aside a sale for arrears of revenue, but the Government have such interest as would, on their application, entitle them to be made a party. Section 424 of the Civil Procedure Code does not preclude a Court from adding the Secretary of State as a necessary party under s. 32 of the Code.

Partition—

See Hindu Law, Inheritance: Hindu Law, Partition: Onus Probandi.

Butwara—Proceedings under Regulation XIX of 1814—Partition by private arrangement. An allottee, under a private partition, sued to stay subsequent partition proceedings brought under Regulation XIX of 1814, and to have his possession confirmed. The defendants objected to the valuation of the suit and to the suit being heard by the Civil Courts, no proceedings having first been instituted before the Revenue Authorities.

Held, that the question, whether the Collector would have brought the lands to partition, depended upon whether they were held "in common tenancy"; if they were not so held, the Collector would be only competent to make an assignment of the revenue in proportion to the several portions of the land held by the shareholders.

That a private partition is no bar to proceedings in the Revenue Courts under s. 30 of Reg. XIX of 1814.

This share was sold for arrears of Government revenue in 1873, and purchased by the plaintiff, who subsequently applied to the Collector for partition, under the Butwara Act. The Collector refused to partition, upon the ground that the Act was not applicable to

The plaintiff then brought the present suit, to which he made the Collector a party, to obtain a declaration that he was entitled to have his share separated from the fourteen-anna eight-gunda share by metes and bounds, and also for a decree directing a partition of the whole mouzah into two parts. Held, that so far as the plaintiff on the one hand, and the owners of the fourteen-anna eight-gunda share on the other, were concerned, the mouzah could be partitioned, but that such partition would not be binding upon the Government unless by consent.

When a plaintiff sues to recover possession of property on the allegation that he had purchased it with his own money, and the suit is dismissed in the Court of First Instance, the Court of Appeal is not justified in giving the plaintiff a decree for a portion of the property, on the ground that the whole was the property of a joint Hindu family in which the plaintiff was a co-sharer.

Dispossession—Adverse possession—Presumption—Onus Probandi—Limitation—Joint owners, adverse possession between. Under the former Limitation Act the cause of action, and under the present law the event from which limitation is declared to run, must have occurred within the prescribed period, and it lies on the plaintiff to show this. Accordingly, where the suit is for possession, and the cause of action is dispossession, the plaintiff is bound to prove possession and dispossession within twelve years. Possession is not necessarily the same thing as actual user. When land has been shown to have been in a condition unfitting it for actual enjoyment in the usual modes, at such a time and under such circumstances that that state naturally would, and probably did, continue till within twelve years before suit, it may properly be presumed that it did so continue, and that the previous possession continued also until the contrary is proved. Such a presumption is in no sense a conclusive one. Its bearing upon each particular case must depend upon the circumstances of that case. Many acts which would be clearly adverse, and might amount to dispossession as between a stranger and the true owner of land, would, between joint owners, naturally bear a different construction.

Suit for—Sale in execution of decree—Possession, application for, by auction purchaser—Subsequent suit for possession of land sold in execution of decree—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 11—Limitation Act, 1877, art. 138. In execution of a decree certain land belonging to the judgment-debtor was sold; subsequently the auction-purchaser, who had not got possession, resold the land to a third party and gave him the certificate. The latter then applied to the Court to be put into possession, but having failed in those proceedings, owing to some irregularity in the description of the boundaries of the property, he instituted a regular suit against the judgment-debtor to obtain possession. On a plea that such suit would not lie as the plaintiff could have got possession in the miscellaneous proceedings, held, that having regard to the provisions of art. 138 of sched. ii of Act XV of 1877, and of s. 11 of Act XIV of 1882 such suit was maintainable.

Potta—

See Stamp Act, 1879, s. 7, para. 2.

Construction of potta—Mokurari ijara—Absence of words of inheritance—Grant in perpetuity. The word 'mokurari' does not necessarily import perpetuity, although it may do so. Used in connection with the grant of an ijara in a potta, this word is not inconsistent with such interest being only for life.

By a potta was granted a mokurari ijara at a fixed rent in a mouza, consisting mainly of waste lands, part of the grantor's zamindari, without words of inheritance. On the death of the grantee, who brought the land under cultivation and died in possession many years after, the question arose whether the potta was for life, or for a heritable and transferable estate.

Held, that there being in the potta no words importing perpetuity, notwithstanding the use of the word 'mokurari,' the question was whether the intention of the parties that the grant should be perpetual, was shown with sufficient certainty in any other way—e.g., by the other terms of the instrument, its objects, the circumstances under which it was made, or the conduct of the parties to it. Held also, that such intention was not shown.

respondent, and had the decree of the Court of First Instance modified in his favour. The next friend appealed to the High Court, where the respondent objected to the next friend being heard, on the ground that she was no party to the suit. Held that the Court would not entertain the objection at the instance of the party through whose fault the error occurred, but that the judgment of the Court below should be set aside, and that of the Court of First Instance restored.

GOUR HARI SANYAL v. PREM NATH SANYAL ... IX 738

Rule nisi to show cause why a person should not be made a party defendant—No grounds stated in or served with the rule—Rule granted during hearing of suit—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 32. During the hearing of a suit for recovery of immoveable property it appeared from the evidence and certain documents put in, that the plaintiff had mortgaged his right, title and interest to a third person, by whom the suit was practically being carried on. On an application by the defendant for the mortgagee to be added as a party defendant, under the provisions of s. 32 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Court directed a rule to issue calling on him to show cause why he should not be added as a party defendant or give security for costs. The rule was not applied for on petition or affidavit, and set out no grounds for the application at all. On an objection taken by the mortgagee at the hearing of the rule, held, that the grounds should have been stated on affidavit or have appeared on the face of the rule, and that the mortgagee was entitled to know what he had to answer, and consequently, the rule being informal, it was discharged with costs.

Presidency Banks Act—XI of 1876—

s. 4 — Certificate of Administration—Act XXVII of 1860—Registration of guardian as proprietor of shares—Power to negotiate. A, the mother and guardian of a minor, obtained a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860. Part of the property of the minor consisted of shares in the Bank of Bengal. A obtained power under her certificate to draw the dividends due upon the shares. After the passing of the Presidency Banks Act, 1876, A applied under s. 4 of that Act to be registered as proprietor of the shares. The Bank refused to register her name as proprietor, and A then applied to have her certificate amended by empowering her to negotiate the shares.

Held that she was not entitled to have such a power inserted in the certificate.

Managing agent—Authority of agent—Liability of Principal—Banker and customer—Bills of Exchange—Indorser and acceptor N & Co., the Managing Agents of the Baree Tea Company, had a general banking account with the Oriental Bank Corporation, which account they were allowed to overdraw on having the overdraft properly secured. Under the articles of Association of the Baree Tea Company, N & Co., had power to "draw, accept, endorse, and negotiate on behalf of the Company all such cheques, promissory notes, drafts, &c., as should be necessary for enabling them to carry on the business of the Company." Purporting to act under this power N & Co., drew a bill of exchange on the Managing Agents of the Company, which was accepted by the latter, and endorsed by N & Co., to the Oriental Bank Corporation, who credited the amount to N & Co.'s general account. The amount was drawn out by cheques drawn by N & Co., personally, without reference to the Baree Tea Company, and there was no proof that the money had been applied for the purposes of the Baree Tea Company. Held, in an action by the Oriental Bank against the Baree Tea Company, that the latter were not liable on the bills as acceptors.

THE ORIENTAL BANK CORPORATION v. THE BAREE TEA COMPANY, LTD. IX 880

Power-of-attorney—Authority to appear and defend—Option of agent to accept service of summons. A person holding a power-of-attorney, even if authorized by the power to appear and defend suits on behalf of his principal, is at liberty to refuse to accept service of summons and appear in a suit brought against his principal, but may either act upon the power or not as he may think proper.

IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF LUCHMEE CHUND ... VIII 817

Power-of-attorney—Meaning of the word 'negotiate' with reference to Government securities. W gave to A and B a power-of-attorney authorizing them jointly and severally to "negotiate, make sale, dispose of, assign and transfer," amongst other things, certain Government securities standing in his name.

B pledged the securities for an advance of Rs. 19,000, and at the same time executed a promissory note for the amount of the loan, the promissory note being signed "B, as attorney for W." In a suit by W to recover the Government securities,

Held, in the Court below, that the power-of-attorney was sufficiently wide to cover the transaction; that the transaction was a fraud on the part of B, but that the transferee (the defendant) had no notice of the fraud, and therefore the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed.

Held, on appeal, per WHITE, J.:—(i) That the words of the power were to be read disjunctively, and the powers conveyed by the words were to be treated as joint and several; (ii) that even supposing the word, 'negotiate' to be applicable to transactions with Government securities (which was doubtful), and that such Government securities stood in the same position as ordinary commercial notes, the word 'negotiate', did not authorize B to do more than put the Government securities in the market, or to put them in circulation in the ordinary way in which such a transaction takes place in the market, and if necessary to endorse them in the name of W; (iii) that the loan, which was the principal transaction, being irrecoverable from W, because unauthorized, the defendant could not retain the Government securities, which were deposited as security for the loan, he not having taken the precaution to ascertain whether B had authority to enter into the transaction.

Per GARTH, C.J.:—That although, on the authority of The Bank of Bengal v. Fagan, a power to negotiate Government securities would authorize the negotiation of Government securities by way of pledge, yet W was entitled to a decree, on the ground, that A and B had no power, under the power-of-attorney, to borrow money in the name of W; and that, therefore, the defendant was not entitled to retain the security given for the advance (viz., the Government promissory note). WATSON v. JONMENJOY COONDOD ... VIII 931

Power-of-attorney—"Purchase, sell, endorse, and transfer"—Meaning of "Power to sell." N & Co., having a joint and several power-of-attorney from the plaintiff, authorizing them "to purchase, sell, endorse, and transfer for the plaintiff, and in the plaintiff's name and on the plaintiff's behalf," all shares standing in his name in the books of any public company or society, entered into a contract embodied in bought and sold notes, agreeing to sell by order and on account of N & Co., to the defendant, twenty-five Muir Mill Cotton shares, and agreeing to buy, by order and for account of N & Co., from the defendant, twenty-five Muir Mill Cotton shares in three months' time at an advanced rate; the bought and sold notes bearing the same date and being one transaction. The transfer deeds were signed by a partner in the firm of N & Co., as attorney for the plaintiff, and N & Co., received the purchase-money of the shares. Previous to the time fixed for the sale of twenty-five Muir Mill Cotton shares by the defendant to N & Co., the latter became insolvent. The plaintiff then brought a suit to recover the shares from the defendant. Held by GARTH, C.J., that, the transaction between N & Co., and the defendant was not justified by the power-of-attorney, the contract not having been entered into "for and on behalf and in the name of the plaintiff" within the meaning of the power. That the transaction was either an actual loan, or a transaction in the nature of a loan, for the purpose of raising money. Per WILSON, J., that the defendant took no title to the shares for two reasons, viz.:—(i) because a power to sell is only a power to sell in the ordinary course of business—i.e., for a money price; (ii) because it was the duty of the defendant, seeing that the shares were sold to him under a power, to see that he paid the price to the plaintiff or his attorney.

A presumptive reversioner to property with which a will deals, has a sufficient interest in the property to entitle him to maintain a suit in respect of such property; and on the authority of *Nobeen Chundra Sult v. If satisfied that s. 17—Lease or agreement to lease. In a suit for possession of certain property and for the execution of a pottah, it appeared that two of the defendants had executed an agreement which was duly registered, by which they acknowledged the receipt of a portion of the salami, and covenanted to execute a pottah on a certain day. This agreement was afterwards confirmed by two of the defendants who were minors when it was entered into: the confirmation was by deed which was duly registered. Subsequently all the defendants executed a document, which provided for the payment of a portion of the salami on the day when possession should be given as provided in the first agreement, and for the payment of the remainder by instalments which were to carry interest. This document was not registered. Held, that it was not a "lease or agreement to lease" within the meaning of s. 17 of the Registration Act, and was admissible in evidence.

s. 50—Registered and unregistered documents—Priority. A vendor sold the same property twice over to different people—once by an unregistered conveyance (the purchase-money being under Rs. 100), giving to his vendee possession, and a second time to another person by a registered conveyance at a time when the first vendee was out of possession.

Held by the Court (PRINSEP, J., dissenting), in a suit by the first vendee to recover possession, that the fact of a vendor having given possession to the first and unregistered purchaser, even if such possession continued to the date of the second conveyance, did not necessarily prevent the operation of that part of s. 50 of the Registration Act which enacts that "a registered document shall take effect as regards the property therein comprised against every unregistered document relating to the same property."

The only case in which the title of the prior unregistered purchaser can prevail against the subsequent registered purchaser for value, is when the latter takes with notice of the title of the former.

Per PRINSEP, J.—A purchaser under a registered conveyance subsequently executed cannot succeed in a suit to eject one who holds possession under a prior but unregistered conveyance, registration of which is optional.

Payment to save sale under. See Arrears of Rent, Suit for.

F of 1824—Assessment of land formerly occupied for Government salt-works. Upon the relinquishment by the Government of lands, within the ambit of a permanently-settled zamindari, continuously used before and since the perpetual settlement of salt-works from the commencement of salt-making by the Government, until after the passing of Reg. I of 1824, the provisions of that Regulation are applicable to the mutual rights of the zamindar and of the Government.

Such lands were held by the officers of the Salt Department, in terms of cl. 11 of that Regulation, "free of rent" and "under a perpetual title of occupancy," whether belonging to a permanently-settled estate or not. The force of the Regulation and the right of the Government to assess such lands are not affected by 'khalari' payments having been made, among other compensations, by the Government to the zamindar; and cl. 11 appears to contemplate some such payment. On a settlement of the relinquished lands, 'khalari' payments, being "sums remitted to the zamindars and to be allowed in perpetuity," within the meaning of the 4th clause of s. 9 of Reg. I of 1824, must be continued to the zamindar; or, if a settlement should be made with others, he should be assessed only for the land retained by him.

Religious Endowment—

Pleading—Form of Suit—Civil Procedure Code, (Act X of 1877), ss. 1, 539—Reg. XIX of 1810—Act XX of 1863. In a suit by two of the worshippers at a certain mosque, instituted after having obtained the sanction of the Advocate-General under s. 539 of the Civil Procedure Code, against the mutawalli of the mosque and two other persons to whom the mutawalli had mortgaged part of the endowed property to secure the repayment of a loan, it appeared, that one of the mortgagees had sold some of the wukf property in execution of a decree which he had obtained upon his mortgage, and the property had been purchased by the other mortgagee. The plaintiffs prayed that the property purchased might be declared to be wukf; that the sale in execution might be declared to be invalid; that a mutawalli might be appointed by the Court; and that the costs of doing the acts of the wukf might be defrayed from the profits of the property belonging to the endowment.

Held, that so far as regarded that portion of the prayer as fell within the provisions of s. 599 of the Code, the plaintiffs were not entitled to sue, as they were not "persons having a direct interest in the trust" within the meaning of the section, and that the suit should have been instituted under s. 14 of Act XX of 1863 after sanction obtained under s. 18.

Held also, that though the plaintiffs might possibly have obtained leave to sue under s. 80 of the Code on behalf of themselves and the other persons attending the mosque, they not having obtained such leave, were not entitled to institute the suit for the purpose of obtaining the relief asked for in the other prayers of the plaint.

The words "trustee, manager or superintendent of a mosque," etc., mentioned in Act XX of 1863, mean the trustee, manager or superintendent of a mosque, etc., to which the provisions of the Act are applicable, not the trustee, etc., of any mosque. And such persons are those to whom the provisions of Reg. XIX of 1810 were applicable.

The mosques, etc., to which the provisions of that Regulation were applicable, were mosques for the support of which endowments had been granted in land by the Government of the country or by individuals; and the mosques, etc., to which the provisions of Act XX of 1863 apply are, not any mosques, etc., but any mosques for the support of which endowments in land have been made by the Government or private individuals.

Appeal—Point decided by lower Court, but not dealt with on appeal. In a suit for enhancement of rent, the Munsif found that the service of notice was sufficient, but that the rent could not be enhanced. On appeal, the District Judge found that the service was insufficient, and dismissed the suit, expressly declining to consider the question whether the rent was enhanceable. In a subsequent suit for enhancement by the same plaintiff against the same defendant, the Munsif found that no sufficient ground for enhancement had been made out, and dismissed the suit. On appeal, the District Judge agreed with the Munsif on this point, and held also, that the decision of the Munsif in the first suit, that the rent could not be enhanced, was res judicata.

Held, that where the decision of a lower Court is appealed to a superior tribunal, which for any reason does not think fit to decide the matter, the question is left open, and is not res judicata.

CHUNDER COOMAR MITTER v. SIB SUNDARI DASSEE ... VIII 631

Application for execution of decree—Decision that execution is barred by limitation.

When a Court, upon an application for execution, has decided that the execution is barred by limitation, and that order has become final in consequence of no appeal having been preferred therefrom, such order will, upon a subsequent application for execution of the same decree, operate as a bar to execution.

Civil Procedure Code, Act X of 1887, s. 13—Competent Court. The decision of a Court, in order to be conclusive in another Court, must have been that of a Court which would have had jurisdiction to decide the question raised in the subsequent suit in which the decision is given in evidence as conclusive. The words "Court of competent jurisdiction," used in s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, include the meaning that the first Court must not have been precluded by the pecuniary limit of its jurisdiction from deciding the question raised in the other. The two Courts must exercise such concurrent jurisdiction in regard to the pecuniary limit of their powers that the subject-matter of the second suit would not have been beyond the powers of the Court which disposed of the prior one. The defence made to a suit on a bond for Rs. 12,000 and interest thereon, in a Court having no pecuniary limit of jurisdiction, was that in a prior suit for Rs. 1,665, balance of interest, brought in a Court with power to try suits not exceeding Rs. 5,000 in value, the principal sum due on that bond had been decided to be Rs. 4,790. Held, that the issue as to the amount of principal due on the bond had not been heard, and finally decided by a Court of competent jurisdiction within the meaning of s. 13.

Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859), s. 246; and Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877, ss. 371-97)—Dismissal of suit on failure to pay costs of summons. The defendants attached certain property, which the plaintiffs alleged belong to them. The plaintiffs preferred a claim to the property under s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859; this claim was disallowed on the 15th August 1877. In June 1878, the plaintiffs brought a suit to establish their title to the property attached, and for confirmation of possession. Pending this suit, the principal defendant died, and the plaintiffs applied for an order to substitute certain persons as defendants. The Court thereupon directed the issue of a summons on the defendants proposed by the plaintiffs to appear and defend the suit; but the plaintiffs failing to pay the costs of the service of this summons, the suit was dismissed on the 14th March 1879. On the 4th March 1880, the plaintiffs again brought a suit to establish their title to the same property, and for confirmation of possession. Held, that as the first suit had not been dismissed on the merits, the plaintiffs were entitled to maintain the second suit.

Mortgage—Purchaser of mortgagor's interest—Sale in execution of decree—Omission to revive suit. A mortgagee brought a suit on his mortgage against his mortgagor and against A, a person who had purchased the right, title, and interest of the mortgagor in execution of a money-decree obtained against him subsequently to the mortgage. Pending the mortgage-suit, and before decree, A died, but the suit was not revived against his representatives. The usual mortgage decree was passed in favour of the mortgagee, who, in execution thereof, sold a portion of the mortgaged property to B. In a suit brought by B against the representatives of A for the property purchased and for general relief—

Held, that the decree in the mortgage-suit was not binding on the representatives of A; nor, under the provisions of Act VIII of 1859, did the failure to revive such mortgage-suit prevent B from bringing the second suit against A's representatives. RAM CHUNDER PODDAR v. HARI DAS SEN IX 463

Suit for arrears of rent—Ex parte decree—Onus probandi. In a suit for arrears of rent of a half-share of land, the plaintiffs relied upon an ex parte decree for rent at a certain rate, which they had obtained in 1869 against the tenants of this share. The defendants relied upon a subsequent decree in a contested suit by the plaintiffs against the tenants of the other half-share, in which a lower rate of rent had been given. No other evidence than the decrees was produced on either side. It did not appear whether the ex parte decree had ever been executed.

Held, that it was open to the defendants to dispute the rate of rent claimed, and that the plaintiffs were bound to prove that they were entitled to recover it.

Suit for maintenance—Agreement as to amount of maintenance—Decree limited to agreed amount. An allowance for the maintenance of a younger member of a family was charged upon the inheritance to which the eldest male member alone succeeded. In a suit for such an allowance brought by a younger brother against the elder, who had succeeded their deceased father in the possession of the estate, held that an order made dismissing a claim for maintenance preferred by such younger brother against their father in his life time, founded on an ekarnama, did not afford a defence under s. 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Held, also, that the brothers having made an agreement, fixing the allowance for maintenance at a certain sum, the younger brother agreeing to receive a less sum for a defined period, he could only obtain a decree for the allowance so reduced.

AHMAD HOSSEIN KHAN v. NIHAL-UD-DIN KHAN IX 945

Suit for possession—Co-defendants—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 13. A leased lands to B, who sued C for possession of a certain mauza, alleging it to be a portion of the lands leased. A was made a defendant, and supported the case of the plaintiff, who obtained a decree. C appealed, making A and B respondents, when the decree was reversed and the suit dismissed, on the ground that the mauza sued for was the property of C, and that ruling was upheld on special appeal to the High Court. Subsequently A brought a suit against C for the same mauza, making B a defendant. Held, that the title to the mauza was res judicata between A and C, and that the suit would not lie. *Gobind Chunder Koondoo v. BISSORUP GOSSAMY v. GORACHAND GOSSAMY IX 120

Suit for rent dismissed for non-appearance—Subsequent suit for possession—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 13. In 1870 two plots of land, numbered 155 and 147, belonging to the same owner, were sold in execution of a decree. The purchaser of plot 155 sold it to A, who, in 1873 sued the tenant of a portion of the land for rent. In this suit A prayed that it might be declared that he was the owner. The tenant alleged that B, the purchaser of plot 147, was the owner of the land in respect of which rent was sought to be recovered, and B was made a party to the suit. At the hearing A did not appear, and the suit was dismissed for default. Subsequently A sold plot 155 to the present plaintiff, who now sued for possession. Held, that the suit was not barred as res judicata.

Of award. See Arbitration.Of Order. See Magistrate, Power of.Subsequent Full Bench decision—Ground for review—Suit by mortgagee to declare lien—Subsequent suit for possession. The plaintiff, a mortgagee, obtained a money-decree against the defendant. A third party, in execution of another decree obtained against the same defendant, put up for sale the property included in the plaintiff's mortgage, and himself bought the right, title, and interest of his judgment-debtor in the property mortgaged to the plaintiff. The plaintiff, subsequently, in execution of his decree, bought in the same property himself, and brought a suit against the defendant and the third party to have it declared that the latter held the property subject to his mortgage. The suit was decreed by the Subordinate Judge, but eventually dismissed by the High Court, on the ground that the plaintiff, by suing for his money-decree only, had deprived himself of the benefit of his lien as against the third party. The plaintiff thereupon brought another suit against the same parties to recover possession of the mortgaged property, which suit eventually came up before a Full Bench, where it was decided that the plaintiff had no right to bring the suit for recovery of possession, but that his proper course was to sue to have his lien upon the property declared, the Court intimating that it would be open to the plaintiff to apply for a review of judgment in the suit originally brought by him.On the review coming on to be heard, it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to a review of that judgment, and that the case was distinguishable from the general rule as to reviews laid down in *Madhub Chunder Ghose v. Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, s. 408—Jurisdiction of High Court. On the 9th of December 1882, a person was convicted under ss. 457 and 109 of the Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment by a Deputy Magistrate of Assam, exercising special powers under s. 96 of the old Code of Criminal Procedure, Act X of 1872. The new Code came into force on the 1st January 1883. The prisoner presented an appeal to the High Court from the conviction and sentence abovementioned on the 23rd of January 1883. Held, that there was no appeal, the case being governed by s. 408 of the new Code, but that the case was a fit one for the exercise of the High Court's Revisional Jurisdiction, and should be dealt with under the powers conferred on the High Court by virtue of that jurisdiction.

In a suit brought to eject a tenant of certain land situated in Assam on the ground that he was a trespasser, where it was shown that he had held the land direct from the Government for a considerable time, and that the land had been made over during his tenancy to the plaintiff in exchange for certain other lands made over to the Government, and where the tenant claimed to have acquired a right of occupancy under Act X of 1859, and not to be liable to ejectment in the manner sought for. Held, per MITTER and WHITE, JJ., that as the Act did not apply to lands situated in Assam, no such right could be claimed, and the suit being properly framed, the plaintiff was entitled to the relief he asked for.

Of occupancy—Conditions necessary for acquiring—Non-payment of rent—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, ss. 6, 22 and 52. Two conditions only are necessary for the acquiring of a right of occupancy, viz., (1), the cultivation or holding of land for a period of twelve years; and (2), that the person holding or cultivating the land should be a ryot. The essential conditions of s. 6, Beng. Act VIII of 1869, are fulfilled without showing the payment of rent, that only being a condition necessary for the maintaining of the right when created. In a suit brought to evict a tenant who had been in possession of certain land for a longer period than twelve years, when it was shown that rent had not been paid, and notice to quit had been given—*Held, that a right of occupancy had been acquired, and that the ryot had the power to prevent forfeiture under the provisions of s. 52, Beng. The defendants used the last mentioned ghat for the purpose of landing goods. Held, that if, when the plaintiff's ancestor erected the buildings, he intended to grant to the Hindu community merely a right of easement over the property, and not to transfer the ownership therein to the community, the plaintiff was entitled to maintain a suit to restrain defendants from using the ghat for trading purposes.

Joint owners—Darpnidars—Purchase by defaulter—Constructive trust. Of three joint owners of a darpadni, two held each a four-anna share and the third an eight-anna share. Default having been made by all three in the payment of the rent, the patnidar brought a suit and obtained a decree for the arrears. In execution of this decree, proclamation was made that the darpadni would be sold on the 5th of October 1877. Up to the commencement of the sale, the four-anna shareholders were unable to pay their proportionate amount of the decree. The eight-anna shareholder declined paying his share, and, when the sale took place, he became the purchaser of the darpadni. In a suit brought by the four-anna shareholders to recover their share from the purchaser, the lower Appellate Court, reversing the decree of the Court of First Instance, decided in favour of the plaintiffs.

Held, on second appeal, that the sale having taken place as much through the default of the plaintiffs as through the default of the defendant, the former had no equity against the latter; and that, therefore, the suit should be dismissed.

RAM LOLL MOOKERJEE v. DEBENDER NATH CHATTERJEE... VIII 8

Landlord and Tenant—Sale of a portion of a tenure—Bengal Act VIII of 1869, ss. 59, 60—Co-sharers—Parties. A portion of a tenure cannot be the subject of a sale under s. 61, Bengal Act VIII of 1869, so as to give the purchaser the same privilege as he would acquire by the purchase of an entire tenure under ss. 59 and 60. A landlord who was in receipt of a half share of the rent of a certain tenure caused that share of the tenure to be sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent. After such sale A, the purchaser, took possession. Subsequently the tenant executed a mortgage, and a decree being obtained by the mortgagee the whole tenure was brought to sale in execution thereof and purchased by the mortgagee who proceeded to oust A. In a suit by A to recover possession of his half share of the tenure on the footing of his purchase. Held, that he could not make out a title to the half tenure with the privilege attaching to the purchase of an entire tenure under ss. 59 and 60 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869, and that as it appeared that the mortgagor, whose rights and interests only were thus sold, was only one of several co-sharers, in the absence of the co-sharers who were not parties to the suit, A was not entitled to the relief he sought.

Clause 2, s. 8 of Regulation VIII of 1819, which provides that a notice of sale under the Regulation shall be stuck up in the cutchery of the zamindar, is not complied with by serving the notice upon the zamindar himself or his agent. The object of the Regulation is to make known to the holders of under-tenures and ryots and the residents of the place that the patni will be sold if the arrears are not paid off within the time specified, and if the notice is not stuck up in the cutchery, as prescribed by the Regulation, there is such a material irregularity in the publication as will avoid the sale.

GOBIND LALL SEAL v. CHANDHURRY MATTY ... IX 172

Regulation VIII of 1819, s. 8, cl. 2—Proof of publication of notice before sale of patni taluk for arrears of rent. The due publication of the notices prescribed by Regulation VIII of 1819, s. 8, cl. 2, forms an essential part of the foundation on which the summary power to sell a patni taluk for non-payment of rent is exercised by the zamindar who, when instituting this proceeding, is exclusively responsible for such publication being regularly conducted. Although objection to the form of the receipt, and the absence of the receipt itself, need not be regarded, if the fact of the due publication of the notices having been made is not a matter of controversy (as held in Sona Beebeav. Lalchand Choudhury), yet where that fact was in doubt owing to the evidence of it not having been secured according to the provisions of the Regulation—a result due to the neglect of those representing the zamindar—the finding of the High Court that due publication had not been established by such proofs as were forthcoming, was maintained by the Judicial Committee.

Suit to set aside. See Limitation Act, 1877, sched. ii, art. 12: Parties.

Suit to set aside sale—Act XI of 1859, ss. 6, 20, 35—Bengal Act VII of 1868, s. 8—Certificate of title. A notification by the Collector under s. 6 of Act XI of 1859, fixing the 31st May 1879 as the date for holding the sale, was affixed in the places mentioned in the section on the 2nd May 1879. Subsequently the 31st May being ascertained to be a holiday, and the 1st June being a Sunday, the Collector, purporting to act under s. 20 of the Act, issued a notification on the 26th May, postponing the sale till the 2nd June. On that day the sale was held, and the Commissioner having upheld it on appeal, a certificate of title was given to the purchasers. Held, in a suit to set aside the sale, that inasmuch as the notification under s. 6 of the Act had not been affixed thirty days before the day fixed by it for holding the same, the requirements of that section had not been fulfilled, and the irregularity was not cured by the notification of the 26th May. Held, further, that the Court was not bound under s. 8 of Bengal Act VII of 1868 to presume conclusively that the provisions of s. 6 of Act XI of 1859, as regards the fixing of the date of sale, had been complied with. Under s. 8 of Bengal Act VII of 1868 the effect of a certificate of title having been given to the purchaser is merely that the Court is bound to presume conclusively the due service and posting of notices.

A person holding land, which is not protected from the operation of s. 37 of Act XI of 1859 by any of the first three exceptions, is yet entitled to the benefit of the fourth exception in respect of any of the items mentioned therein, which may have been established on the land; and there is nothing in the words of the exception confining the benefit of it to tenure or under-tenure holders, and excluding the ryots from it.

Bhago Bibee v. Ramkant Roy Chowdhry followed.

The benefit of the fourth exception to s. 37, Act XI of 1859, must be limited to improvements effected bona fide and to permanent buildings erected before the revenue-sales, and should not be conceded to anything subsequently constructed, or which appears to have been constructed merely for the purpose of defeating the rights of an auction-purchaser. Subject to this reservation, it does not matter whether the improvements have been effected by the present holder or by some previous occupier.

Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 311—Irregularity in publication of intended sale. An objection to the validity of a sale of revenue-paying land, on the ground that the revenue assessed upon it had not been stated in the proclamation of the intended sale, in accordance with s. 287 of Act X of 1877, was taken, for the first time, in the Court of appeal; an application to set aside the sale, on the ground that it had taken place without proclamation made having been rejected by the Court of the First Instance, which found that proclamation had been made. Held, that the objection was taken too late, although if properly taken in the Court of First Instance, it would have been good to the extent that not stating the amount of the revenue was an irregularity; substantial damage, resulting from it, remaining to be proved, as required by s. 311 of Act X of 1877. Held, also, that inadequacy of price having been alleged as substantial damage, without having been proved to be the effect of the non-statement of the revenue, the applicant had not (as required by s. 311) proved, to the satisfaction of the Court, that he had sustained substantial damage by reason of such irregularity.

Direction in will for payment of debts—Decree against heirs for debt of ancestor—Charge on property. A testator by his will directed payment of all his debts, and subject thereto devised his property to his heirs. After one of the testator's creditors had obtained a decree against the heirs in their representative capacity, which by its terms was to be satisfied out of the assets left by the testator, one of the heirs mortgaged his share in twelve properties left by the testator. Subsequently to the mortgage one of the mortgaged properties was sold in execution of the creditor's decree. The mortgagee afterwards brought a suit against the mortgagor and obtained a decree on his mortgage. Held, that as neither the direction in the will for payment of debts nor the decree in the creditor's suit created a charge on the property of the testator, the property sold in execution of the creditor's decree had been sold subject to the mortgage, and the mortgagee was entitled to execute his decree against that property.

Sale under mortgage for payment of Government revenue—Rights of respective purchasers. In 1855, a decree for an account was passed in the Supreme Court of Calcutta against A, an executor. A died in 1856, and the suit, which was revived against his representatives, came on for consideration on further directions on 29th August 1866. It was then found that A's estate was liable for Rs. 1,32,406-11-8, and his representatives were ordered to pay this money into Court. The representatives having made default in payment, a writ of fiat facias was issued, under which the property was sold by the Sheriff of Calcutta, and conveyed by him to B on 1st April 1867. Previously to this the representatives of A had, on 11th January 1865, mortgaged the same property, together with other lands, "for the purpose of paying the Government revenue of certain taluqs belonging to A deceased," and the mortgagee having obtained a decree on h. mortgage, the property was sold to C under that decree on 30th March 1867. In a suit for possession by C against B,—

Held, that though the sale to B was made for the express purpose of paying the debts of A, B's title was not to be preferred to that of C, who claimed under the mortgage of 1865, which was made for the purpose of paying Government revenue; and,

Semle.—The result would be the same even if the mortgage of 1865 had not been made for the purpose of paying Government revenue, as it did not appear that the mortgagee, at the date of the mortgage, knew that there were unpaid creditors of A, and that A's representatives intended to misapply the money so advanced to them.

The trustee refused to hand over the trust-property, and A thereupon instituted a suit to have the trust set aside. His wife was a minor, and there was no issue of the marriage.

Held that, although there might be cases in which, where no other person but the settlor was interested, the deed might be regarded as a mere direction as to the manner in which the settlor's property should be applied for his benefit, and as such revocable by the settlor, yet that, in the present case, there being an infant beneficiary, the deed could not be revoked.

s. 7, para. 2—Stamp-duty—Lease—Patta—Mortgage. By an instrument which recited that A was indebted to B in the sum of two lacs of rupees, and that A had taken a fresh loan of Rs. 2,59,000 from B, the former leased certain mauzas to the latter for a term of twenty years, at a yearly rental of Rs. 1, 40,000. It was provided that, from the rent of each year, a portion should be deducted in payment of A's debt to B; so that in this way the whole debt should be paid by a series of instalments extending over the term of the lease. The instrument also contained the usual clauses found in pattas. On the question, what was the proper amount of stamp-duty leviable on the document—

Held, that though the arrangement intended to be effected was partly a lease and partly an usufructuary mortgage, yet the instrument came within the provisions of s. 7, para. 2 of the Stamp Act, and should be stamped as a mortgage only.

THE EMPRESS v. KOTA LALANG ... VIII 214

Construction of—Hindu Wills Act. In construing an Act of the Government of India passed in the form peculiar to the Hindu Wills Act, the sound rule of construction is to give their full and natural meaning to the provisos, and only to give effect to the enactments contained in the applied sections and chapters so far as the latter do not contravene the full and natural meaning of the provisos.

Transfer of—

Case—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), section 23—Practice—Ground for transfer. Section 23 of Act XIV of 1882 is only intended to provide for those cases where, on the ground of expense or convenience or some other good reason, the Court thinks that the place of trial ought to be changed. Parties desirous of obtaining the transfer of a case from one forum to another ought clearly to explain to the Court by petition and affidavit what is the nature of the claim and defence; they should further state what are the issues and the evidence required, and then satisfy the Court that, either on the ground of expense or convenience or otherwise, the place of trial ought to be changed.

Procedure. Whether or not a suit has been properly valued is a preliminary question, which ought to be disposed of before the case goes to trial.

JOYTARA DASSEE v. MAHOMED MOBARUCK ... VIII 5

Suit to stay butwara proceedings under Reg. XIX of 1814, after partition by private arrangement. An allottee, under a private partition, sued to stay subsequent partition proceedings brought under Reg. XIX of 1814, and to have his possession confirmed. The defendants objected to the valuation of the suit and to the suit being heard by the Civil Courts, no proceedings having first been instituted before the Revenue Authorities.

Held, that such a suit should be considered to be one for a declaratory decree, or for something in the nature of an injunction, and that, therefore, the plaint should not be stamped according to the value of the entire estate.

JOYNATH ROY v. LALL-BAHADOUR SINGH ... VIII 1

Vendor and Purchaser—

Conditional contract "Subject to approval of title by purchaser's solicitors"—Rescission—Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 17, cl. (b). An agreement for the purchase and sale of certain immoveable property provided that the completion of the contract should be "subject to the approval of the purchaser's solicitors" (naming them), and that if they should not approve of the title, the vendor should refund the earnest-money and pay all costs incurred by the purchaser in investigating the title. The purchaser's solicitors disapproved of the title, and the purchaser rescinded the contract. The agreement was not registered.

Held, in a suit to recover the amount of the earnest-money and costs, that, assuming the objections to be reasonable, the purchaser was entitled to rescind the contract.

Held further, that the agreement did not require registration.

Ward of Court—

How far incapacitated from contracting—Reg. X of 1793—Court of Wards Act (Beng. Act IX of 1879)—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 11. On a reasonable construction of the whole of Reg. X of 1793, a ward of Court, duly constituted as such, is not thereby absolutely incapacitated from contracting, but the power of the ward to contract is taken away so far as regards all property which, under the provisions of the law, comes under the charge and control of the Court of Wards.
